The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S

Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

PREMIUMS TO GROCERS

Their Boys and Girls or Clerks

Thousands of Them—$1 to $100 Each

We offer these premiums for Window and Store Displays.

They are offered as payments, not prizes. So every grocer may earn one.

Displays may be made of Quaker Oats, family size or regular size. Or they may include both.

All display signs, price cards, etc., must be supplied by the store. Quaker Oats advertisements clipped from magazines, etc., may be used to attract attention.

Displays must be made during December or January, the best selling season on Quaker Oats.

To secure a premium, it is absolutely necessary that a photograph of the display be sent to us. No other evidence will do. On the back of the photograph write your name and address.

A Kodak picture 2 x 2 in. will do. This picture may be taken with a Brownie Kodak costing only $1.

All photographs must be in our hands by February 5th. Checks for the premiums will be mailed in February.

We name as a committee to decide on the best displays:

MR. E. M. TROWERN, Toronto
Dominion Secretary Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.
Mr. J. L. MAUDE, Toronto
Secretary Window Trimmers' Association of Canada.

The selling power of a display of this kind is its chiefest merit. Its purpose is to sell oatmeal. A hundred packages of Quaker Oats piled prominently inside the store, either on the end of the counter or on a table, with clever signs attached, is oftentimes a better selling display than the same goods placed in the window.

Displays will be judged by their power to sell Quaker Oats. Put your display where it will sell the most goods.

For the best display	$100.00
For the second best display	50.00
For the third best display	25.00
For the five next best displays	10.00	each
For the twenty next best displays	5.00	each
For every other display, containing three cases or more, of which a photograph is sent	1.00	each

In the case of a tie—where the judges cannot decide which display best deserves one of the larger premiums—the premium will be divided among the two or more whose displays seem of equal value.

Special Contest Price

The unusual effort and publicity during this contest will sell more Quaker Oats for each grocer than ever before. For your additional requirements we make you a special price on

Quaker Oats Family Size $3.90 per case

(Except in the far West, where a shade of 10c. per case will be allowed from the regular price.)

This special of $3.90 per case for Quaker Oats family size is in no sense a reduction in price, but is a special advertising allowance on this order to assist you in making a big selling display that will largely increase your business.

Place your order at once with your jobber (or with us) for Quaker Oats Family Size or Quaker Oats Regular Size, for delivery up to January 31st, as you wish it. Better make two orders—one for immediate delivery, and one for delivery in January.

Has Your Boy or Girl a Camera?

If you don't care for yourself, you have a clerk who cares, or a boy or girl, perhaps.

Note that every display gets a premium if a photograph is sent. But no grocer gets more than one.

The lowest premium—one dollar—will buy a Brownie Kodak, with which the picture may be taken. So any grocer who makes a display—or his boy or girl—is sure of enough to pay for this camera. And he has an equal chance with the others for a larger premium.

Somebody around you wants to earn one of these premiums. Give that somebody a chance.

To you, Mr. Grocer, the best payment will come in increased sales of Quaker Oats. Let people know that you specialize in it. Let them know that you handle this favorite brand.

Nothing is more important—more trade-winning now—than a corking display of Quaker Oats. Make it now, while we offer to pay for it. Or let somebody around you make it.

Address all Photographs to

The Management of a Retail Business

No. 2—Stocktaking—Continued

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

It is unnecessary, and it would be useless, to attempt to set down any hard and fast rules of method in taking stock. The object to be attained is, of course, the same in all cases, but a certain plan might be adaptable to one class of business, and yet prove totally unsuited to some others. In no case, however, should the work be delegated to under-clerks, and, when possible, it should be undertaken by those highest in responsibility. This point would receive special emphasis in the event of an auditor being called in to make a report, or in settlement of a fire claim should such an occasion unfortunately arise. Nor should any old, half-used book be requisitioned in which to make the stock record. Suitable stock sheets, prepared for the purpose, may be obtained, at little cost, from almost any commercial stationer, and the use of these will serve to facilitate an intelligent classification of the stock, which is most desirable, though often overlooked. The use of ordinary lead pencil in making the record should be strongly discouraged. It presents too many opportunities for after-manipulations, and detracts from the permanent value of the document. Fountain pens are cheap now, and obviate former objections to ink, on the score of inconvenience, but failing ink, pencils that are indelible should be resorted to. When the stocktaking has been completed, the sheets should be arranged in classified sequence, then numbered consecutively, and locked in a binder procured for the purpose. The next step is to ascertain the value of the stock, and this should be carefully done, and just as carefully checked. The total of one sheet should not be carried forward to the next, and so on, until the grand total is made to appear at the foot of the last sheet. Such custom not only causes loss of time, but in the event of an error being found later, necessitates the correction of all the sheets following the error. The better plan is to bring the total of each sheet forward to a recapitulation sheet, each total being identified by the sheet number and the class of merchandise listed. The total of the recapitulation sheet will, of course, represent the total value of the stock, and should be certified correct, as to totals. Eaen individual sheet should likewise be signed as to calling out the stock, taking it down, inserting the prices and extending the values. None of these suggestions would entail any difficulty or hardship, and their adoption would not only prove a satisfaction to the owner whose desire is to ascertain his true position, but would enhance the credibility of the work in the eyes of the bank and creditors, and the auditor and fire underwriters as well.

The Value of the Stock.

It is appropriate to discuss here the principle that should be followed in pricing the stock. Opinions vary, somewhat, some claiming that market value should be taken, irrespective of cost, while others contend that the reverse process is the more correct. The writer adheres to the latter system for the reason that no matter how market values may fluctuate, neither profit nor loss can be determined prior to sale. A merchant with say 100,000 yards of cotton goods on hand, might feel tempted to take advantage of a rise of a cent per yard in market value, for that would mean an advance of $1,000 in the value of his stock. But if he shows the profit or rather gain, in this year's business, and prior to the sale of the goods, it follows that next year's business, during which the goods would be sold, would be deprived of its legitimate profit. Supposing further, that the market on these same cotton goods declined a cent per yard after January 1st, it likewise follows that the new year's business would be saddled with a loss of $1,000 at one stroke, and without the semblance of justification. There can be no question that as a general rule and under ordinary circumstances, actual cost, less an allowance for depreciation through shopwear or other causes, if such exist, should govern in the valuation of stock on hand.

What Constitutes Cost.

But what constitutes actual cost, is sometimes asked? In the opinion of the writer, the invoice of purchase, after deducting trade discount if any, and adding cost of freight, and drayage charges, would show the actual cost of goods. Discounts secured for cash should not be deducted from the cost, nor should railway charges for demurrage be added. The one is a reward earned through diligence, and the other a penalty suffered through negligence, and both constitute items of the current profit and loss account. Packing charges, which, in the case of chinaware or glassware, for instance, amounts to a serious item, are, of course, included in the invoice and form a legitimate part of the actual cost, but the cost of unpacking, if any, or of warehousing, have no proper place in the cost, and should be charged direct to the profit and loss account. Shortages and breakages, if not recovered from the shipper, should also be debited to profit and loss, and not to the cost of the remaining goods as is often done. It has been claimed by some authorities, and not without some show of reason and equity, that the cost of the buying department should be charged to the cost of the goods purchased, on the ground that economies are effected thereby, and the goods placed on the shelves at a lower cost than they otherwise would. The writer fails to see the conclusiveness of the argument, however, because, if lower prices are obtained then longer profits are made possible, and the profits should therefore bear the burden.

An Equipment Inventory.

With reference to fixtures and equipment, these should never be joined to the merchandise stocks, as is sometimes done. A separate inventory should be taken, and at a valuation, annually depreciated, until they reach a figure that would entail no loss in the event of realization of assets..

Bills Receivable and Payable.

The next talk will deal with bills and accounts, receivable and payable, and other assets and liabilities that usually find a place in the average balance sheet. Before closing this talk, however, it might not be amiss to suggest an easy method for ascertaining the value of goods purchased by the gross, with only the gross price available. The writer happened to enter a drug store one day and found a clerk laboring over the cost each of a stock of tooth brushes which had cost varying prices per gross. Here was his process:—Divide the gross price by 144 to ascertain the cost each, then multiply by the number of brushes to find the cost. For instance 9 brushes at $20. $20.00 ÷ 144 = 13 8-9 cents each. 13 8-9 × 9 = $1.25, cost of 9 brushes. A tedious process this, and likely to exhaust the patience and ruffle the temper of any stocktaker, if much of it had to be done. The following method is much simpler, and though not mathematically accurate, is sufficiently exact for all purposes—seven times 144 equals slightly over 1,000, therefore seven times the price per gross, divided by 1,000, equals the cost each. Seven times $20.00=$140.00. Move the deci-

How Retailer Raises Standard of Quality

Evolution of High-class Goods Now Found on Shelves of Canada's Best Stores—Wherein Lies the Retail Dealer's Power to Sell Such Goods—Trend of the Times.

By Harry Theobald.

In raising the standard of groceries the retailer has played a prominent part. Articles that are now going into the average household were unheard of only a few years ago. They are now occupying a conspicuous position on the grocer's shelves alongside goods that have been known to the trade for a long time. When the manufacturer turned out some new line only the first step had been taken, the uncertain work still remained —the winning of the goodwill of the general public.

Success of a New Line.

It is not so long ago that prepared soups made their first appearance. Just now they are having a wide sale, but their field is only partially covered. However, the most doubtful or difficult part of the road to success has been covered. Manufacturer and retailer are confident of the future, and their individual efforts henceforth will be made with a feeling of security that will enable both to attempt greater things. It must be remembered that the retailer was the court of last resort for his customer. If they enquired, he recommended, for it was his confidence in the quality of the goods that induced him to give a trial order. When they failed to mention this new idea in canned food, he or his clerks suggested a purchase at opportune times. He gave over one or more of his windows to attractive displays and his counters likewise played a part in the general scheme. To the retailer belongs a great deal of credit in this, as in many other similar campaigns.

Raising the Standard.

Another example of the retailer's work is in preserved fruits. As canned fruits and vegetables turned the public's attention to the quality of these goods, canners went a step further, and the result is found in the increase of preserved fruit in glass. The jars were practically identical with the old homemade idea, but as in many other directions, people have been departing from the old mode of living; so it was felt that there was an opening to appeal to women who either would not or could not preserve fruit as did their grandmothers. So the grocer whispered to those customers whom he thought would buy, and day after day he or his clerks repeated it. Hardly is it necessary to remark that the high-quality preserved fruit has a large sale, and grocers will steadily augment it.

The Watered Oyster.

It is likewise not so long ago that the watering of oysters was prohibited, and the new regulations caused an advance in price, but the public profited by receiving better quality, and, furthermore, they were paying for oysters and not for water. But the majority of purchasers overlooked the latter point, thinking only of the higher price. It remained for the retail grocer to make the necessary explanations, and to point out that oysters would no longer be water-soaked, but that they would be delivered with practically no loss of the freshness they possessed when taken from the beds.

And, note the rows of pickles, sauces, etc., that adorn the shelves of the average grocery. These, with many specialties, have been introduced by the retail trade. A customer may read about a new article, but she has never seen it and knows next to nothing about it. Her grocer, however, is asked his opinion, and as far as the individual woman is concerned, that is generally sufficient.

Grocers will affirm that some women are always skeptical about innovations in foodstuffs. A customer does not say, "I see you have plum pudding now, Mr. Brown. Give me a two-pound tin." No, it is, "What's this plum pudding like, Mr. Brown?" Then it is probable that she will remark upon the vast amount of food that may be secured in tins. She will also want to know if many are buying it, or she may ask the price, depending upon her personal traits.

Initiative of Some.

And so it goes. Many grocers wait for the manufacturer to produce a new line, but not a few scour the country for special or fancy lines that are sold elsewhere. Instances could be mentioned of those who visit the large cities in the United States for suggestions in the matter of new goods. Fancy biscuits, cakes and confectionery furnish sufficient examples in themselves of the advancement that grocers have made in the raising of the standard of their goods. The strongest evidence on this question, however, is to be gained from the older grocers. Those who have been thirty or forty years in the business can trace the evolution of the old-time store so dear to cartoonists down to the present-day emporiums found throughout the country.

In all the retailer has played a prominent part, and there is no likelihood of his losing the important position he holds in his relations with the manufacturer on the one hand, and the customer on the other.

Methods to Make January Busy Month

Strive to Maintain January Sales at Good Average—Should Not Invite Dullness by Stopping Advertising—Flour Should be Featured During Month—The Time to Start in on Season's Fish Campaign—Many Reasons Why Canned Goods Should be Pushed—Keep up Display of Nuts.

By W. J. Bryans.

January is regarded by many grocers as a quiet month. The very fact that they regard it as such has the tendency to make them listless and unambitious to make the first month of the year a good one in point of sales. Business during January should not be poor. The grocer has so many things at hand which may be brought into play in assisting sales that January trade should be appreciable in volume.

Dealers accustomed to fall back on their oars and allow January sales to sag below the average have in numerous cases admitted it was their own fault. By a change of attitude on their part and the expenditure of some real effort during this month, they have made January bear its full burden of the year's work. Others by swinging themselves into the line of aggressive dealers will also be able to keep the cash register working full time.

Don't Neglect the Advertisement.

The mistaken idea exists that advertising during what is considered a quiet period is a waste of money. The fact that interest in the dealer's goods is at a low ebb is taken as a sign that interest cannot be aroused. Far from the truth. The quiet period is the time the dealer should advertise to maintain interest and sales at desired level. The dealer cannot afford to invite a dull season by discontinuing his advertising.

Flour should be given its share of attention during January. It has been neglected during the holiday season and now should be a splendid time to feature it.

Cater to Farming Trade.

In country districts, the fall supply of flour put in by some farmers will be running low and they should be induced to replenish the stocks. The present is rather a slack season with majority of farmers and they have more time to read your advertisements. A good flour ad. in the local paper should serve to arouse interest. Point out the features of your flour that will appeal to customers. Look up the advertising phrases that the flour manufacturers themselves use to induce sales for their product. They are valuable material for your advertising. Co-operate with the publicity being given to the flour you handle by the manufacturers. Do not forget the sales impelling force of personal talks to customers about your flour when they visit your store.

The city grocer does not sell the same volume of flour. However, the baker is far from being supreme even in the larger centres. There still lingers with the city people the desire for the home made bread and a good window display may be turned to good advantage in making that desire so strong that it will create sales for flour. Pastry flour should also be given its share of attention, and as in bread flour, quality should be made the keynote.

A Splendid Fish Season.

Real winter has now descended upon Canada to stay. The weather is now most favorable for the handling of fish and the retail grocer should give this department the prominence to which it is entitled. Fish are comparatively easily handled. They give a good profit. They attract customers to the store. The inducement for handling them is therefore strong. There is also a good reason for getting started at once, in the fact that if you get a customer's trade now you will probably retain it throughout the season and before the close of Lent trade is bound to be large.

Push Canned Vegetables.

There are several good reasons for pushing canned goods this month. They are almost self apparent. Green goods and dry vegetables are scarce and high in price. Canned vegetables should therefore sell easily. Given attention to tomatoes, peas and corn, the three big lines, but don't forget beans, asparagus, beets, spinach, succotash, etc.

The dealer knows the amount of fruit put up by the housewife last year was comparatively small. He knows that his canned fruits and jams are prepared in a strictly sanitary manner and that they compare favorably with the home-made preserves. These are the arguments which he should use in selling canned fruits, jams and marmalades.

Now that more seasonable weather has set in, syrups and molasses should not be forgotten. Condensed and evaporated milk under the present scarcity and high price of the fresh article should sell well. It is not a well-known fact among consumers that condensed milk possesses all the advantages of the fresh milk. This should be impressed upon them.

Fruits and Nuts Will Sell.

The holiday season is over, but this does not mean that the sale of fruits and nuts is over. Indeed during January, sales in these lines should be good. Supplies and varieties are large enough for good display. Navel oranges will be improving in quality. Grapefruit, bananas and Malaga grapes are in ample supply. Lemon sales under the present weather should be large.

The retailer should not allow the sale of nuts to drop after the holiday. This used to be a common practice among nearly all grocers, but more and more they are coming to recognize that nuts will sell all year round. They possess a high food value that should be impressed on customers. They should not be shifted to the background but displayed where customers will see them.

Now, while the year is yet young, is the time to make a start towards a record year's showing. If the mid-winter sales are kept up to a good standard it will assist materially in the year's total.

GIVE ATTENTION TO WINDOW DISPLAYS.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 4.—(Special.)—Vancouver grocers are noting much more than in the past the value of window display. This is especially so on the principal streets, notably Granville, where the west end trade is catered to, and a displayed article suggests a delicacy for the meal. The London Grocery, the A. & C., McDowell's and McTaggart's are instances of where the fullest advantage is taken of the store front. Another is May's Pantry Grocery. With perhaps smaller frontage on the street, an excellent pattern is followed. Entrance may be had to store on either side of a display with a square area, while against each wall are glass cabinets which give opportunity of view, while keeping the goods protected from the wind and weather.

A new feature is a silent salesman, not detached, just between the entrances, which commands the attention of those who stop to look for a moment. All these are attractive with glass and white tile.

Drummers Enjoy Song, Speech and Story

Snack Club Holds Annual Christmas Holiday Dinner—About Fifty in Attendance—President Geo. Smye the Toastmaster—Some of the Incidents.

ONCE upon a time— but before the stories begin it is necessary to say they were told by members of The Drummers' Snack. The occasion was their annual dinner at the Walker House, Toronto, last Friday evening. No further introduction is needed to express the intimation that there was a good time, not coming, but then and there.

William Algie, of Alton hamlet—"The Father of the Club"—is responsible for this appropriate 1911 yarn. Morning after the 21st—the September equinox, as he put it—Michael and Patrick met. Mike said to Pat: "Michael, did you vote aginst riciprocity?" "No," returned Patrick, "shure an' I did not." "Well, be jabers," said Michael, "somebody did."

Sol Walters recited a story about "Pete Sousa's Bear Hunt." According to Sol it is one of Drummond's (unpublished) poems. Pete went out one day "for wan big bear." But the bear saw Pete first and, and———, but the shorthand notes on this story got lost so that the conclusion is necessarily omitted.

There is much talent among the members of the Drummers' Snack. Colonel Stoneman is a master in the art of elocution, and at the dinner told in true dramatic fashion, the story of how Bill Adams won the Battle of Waterloo—as related by Bill. Bill credits himself with scaring off Bonaparte with a million behind him, while he—Bill Adams—had but a hundred picked men. Anyone who can believe Bill Adams henceforth is himself a true son of Ananais.

A Scotch boy one time was offered a penny by a preacher if he would prevent his father from sleeping through the sermon. The boy was ambitious enough to give his services, and the first Sunday he earned his penny. The "meenester" was so encouraged over the success of the experiment that he made a deal with the boy to pay him a penny for every Sunday he prevented his father from disturbing the sermon by his snoring. Next Sunday went by, but the father slept. The same thing was repeated the following Sunday. The "guid mon" met the lad during the week and wanted to know why he was not earning his penny. He had lost money, he thought, and wondered, because he was a Scotch boy. "Why, me faythe gies me tupence each Sabbath to le' him alone." That story goes to Wm. Algie's credit.

Michael Malone spoke to the toast, "Manufacturing and Commercial Interests," and touched upon some important national questions, such as technical education, which he strongly favored, Canada's natural resources and her possibilities. "Make technical education as thorough and broadcast as the collection of taxes," he said, and that means it will have to be pretty thorough.

* * *

"The Great Force" and "The Force Behind The Force" discussion between W. Pringle and Robt. Algie at the banquet table lost these drummers their "Tomato Bouillon with Whipped Cream en Tasse," part of their "Thedford Celery" and a portion of the "Broiled Restigouche Salmon Steak." They finished the argument, however, in time for "Venison Chop Farci" (whatever that means), and the "Frozen Egg Nogg." But whether a centrifugal force controls the universe or a force behind that again or the force behind the force behind the force behind the centrifugal force that controls it, is a conundrum for us all.

J. A. Willoughby, of Georgetown, Ont., the home secretary of the great and only annual Drummers' Snack outing, was there, and extended to the boys an advance welcome on their 1912 visit.

Robt. Algie became quite reminiscent, and referred in poetic terms to the infant days of The Snack at Alton. He very touchingly, as the dramatic critic might say, brought back to memory the picture of Alton School boys and girls proudly waving their Union Jacks through Alton streets. He hoped the good fellowship feeling among the boys would ever exist.

Here is another from Wm. Algie's story book: If our memory serves us right, it was about a Scotchman traveling from Edinburgh to Inverness. He handed some money through the wicket to a ticket clerk, who on passing back the piece of pasteboard, ventured the following information: "Change at Aberdeen." "No, sir," replied the traveler," eef you don't min' I'll tak' my change noo."

Charley Silver responded to toast to the Drummers' Snack Club. As he had been elected to the board of the Commercial Travelers' Association during the week, he was naturally quite elated and profusely thanked the Snack Club for their assistance. M. Matthews championed the cause of the ladies.

Speaking of talent among the drummers, one must not overlook Table 2, where the bagpipe band, led by Charley Smye, furnished fightin' music. Jack Wildfong and Geo. Campbell did parts of the skirlin'.

Billy Dore—Harry Lauder's double—and a great baseball player at the annual outings, performed well as usual. Lauder was out-Laudered, all right and—we'll get him to tell you the Scotch meenester's version of the ball game when no Sunday school students are about.

When Jack Wildfong's name was called for a song some decided to leave the room under the leadership of Sol Walters. But when Mr. Wildfong announced a recitation it was different. Those that came to scoff remained to listen. And it was something extra good—a medley.

Jack Charles looked the very picture of health in his patriotic Canadian song. Nothing seems a worry to him. W. Pringle and W. N. Shaver were other appreciated singers.

President Geo. Smye performed the arduous duties of toast master, ably assisted by Vice-President Billy Meen. In E. Jules Brazil, the club secured a premiere performer on the piano.

On the Side.

Wm. Algie has a story on the origin of the Kandy Kid. Get him to tell it.

Table No. 1 was too quiet for Walter Madill. So he left it.

In the bagpipe selections, Geo. Campbell kept time with a white handkerchief. He neglected to bring his plaidee.

Michael Malone has improved wonderfully in his method of delivering addresses from a year ago. No local option memory in his make-up.

Ernie Bowles, the club's official accompanist, was unavoidably absent.

To attend the Snack Dinner, Wm. Algie had to forego the pleasure of a dance with his wife which he regretted very much. They have been married a long time too. Good fellowship strong there all right.

"Casey at the Bat," by Colonel Stoneman. Sufficient hath been said.

The Club's motto:

Here we stand,
Bagmen, in a band,
Knights of the grip are we,
We greet our King,
With a three cheer ring,
For loyal Princes are we.

More poetry:

But pleasures are as poppies spread,
You seize the flower, the bloom is shed;
Or like the snowfall on the river.
A moment white then gone forever.

PAPER BAG COOKERY.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—Can you advise us of any firm in Canada from whom we can procure paper bags for cooking purposes; if not, where we can buy them in the States?

AUTO DELIVERY.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—In the Fall Campaign number of November 3, on page 109, is an interesting comparison of the cost between horse and motor delivery service.

I would like to have the names of two or three retail grocers who are using the motor delivery. Also some names of companies selling motor delivery wagons.

My annual turnover is from $50,000 to $60,000. Do you think it would pay to establish a motor delivery service? Aside from quality in the goods, I consider the delivery service the most important factor in building up a good grocery business.

I have been a constant reader of The Grocer for the past two years, and have received some very helpful suggestions from it. I do not see how any grocer who makes any pretensions of being up-to-date can get along without it.

Wishing The Grocer a prosperous New Year.

J. E. NIX.

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 28.

Editorial Note.—Here are some names of retail dealers who have established motor car delivery: Stevens & Allan, Kamloops, B. C.; J. Ingham, Jr., 5 Market Street, Toronto; F. Simpson & Sons, 736 Yonge Street, Toronto, and Gallagher & Co., 107 King Street East, Toronto.

Among manufacturers of auto delivery wagons are following: Menard Motor Car Co., Windsor, Ont.; Commercial Motor Car Co., Windsor, Ont.; American-Abell Engine & Thresher Co., Toronto, and Ontario Motor Car Co., Bloor Street East, Toronto. We would judge auto delivery would be advantageous to your business.

MOTOR DELIVERY AGAIN.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—In your Fall Campaign number, November 3, 1911, on page 109, you give an article on Motor and Horse delivery. Would you please give the address of manufacturers of motor delivery waggons?

Saskatoon, Sask., Dec. 27, 1911.

Editorial Note.—Answer to above query applies to this also.

WATCH FOR THE GYPSIES.

A band of Gypsies has been traveling along the Lake Ontario shore and St. Lawrence river, extorting money from merchants, which bordered closely on stealing. Their mode of campaign in telling fortunes was to get merchants to produce money which they placed on the palms of their own hands, and went through some sort of seance, leaving, of course, with the money. In Belleville two of the Gypsy women were arrested for stealing various sums of money, totalling $29. They pleaded guilty and, besides making restitution, they were assessed $44 for officials' fees, court costs, etc.

BETTER HOTEL ACCOMMODATION.

C.T.A. Pass Strong Resolution—Officers for 1912.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Commercial travellers seem determined to secure recognition in the fight for better hotel accommodation throughout Ontario. At the annual meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association of Canada, held in St. George's Hall last week, the question was thrashed out. The meeting found the members in fighting trim. A petition has been put into circulation asking the Ontario Government to improve hotel accommodation, especially in local option towns.

The petition, which will be signed by nearly 8,000 commercial travellers, will be presented to the Government through the Provincial Secretary, Hon. W. J. Hanna. The Association passed a resolution that if the petition is again ignored, the members of the C.T.A. would then demand a Royal Commission to investigate hotel conditions and to suggest a remedy for the protection of the health and lives of the traveling public in all municipalities, whether under local option or license law. James Summers recommended that the Association march in a body to the Parliament Buildings to make this demand—if the petition were slighted by the Government.

W. H. Scott said the Association would expect the Government to adopt either of the two policies—to directly license and control all hotels and insist on proper accommodation, or pass legislation which would require municipalities under local option to provide proper hotel accommodation.

The officers for 1912 are as follows:—President, Robert Gemmell; first vice-president, S. Stirling; second vice-president, Jas. G. Cane; secretary, James Sargent; treasurer, E. Fielding.

Montreal has won the Chinese egg case now well-known to Grocer readers. The Court of Appeal has reversed the decision of Justice Weir.

Beginning on Saturday, Jan. 6, grocers of Port Hope, Ont., will close their places of business at 10 o'clock, and no rorders for delivery will be taken after nine o'clock.

Wentzells, Limited, Halifax, Nova Scotia, has been reorganized through Canadian Investors, the new company including some prominent investors. The management will be divided between H. W. Wentzell and J. J. Penny. The board of directors is composed of H. W. Wentzell, president; O. E. Smith, vice-president; Joseph J. Penny, R. Moulten, M.H.A., and G. F. Ring.

MANAGEMENT OF RETAIL BUSINESS.

mal to the left three more places, to divide by 1,000, and we have .140 or 14 cents each and $1.26, the cost of 9. The difference is so fractional as to be inconsequential, and the method involves only a slight mental effort. There are many quick methods of figuring, reference to which will be made from time to time in the course of these talks, and all of which will prove helpful in reducing the labor incident to the transaction of business.

PLAN FOR THE FUTURE.

The beginning of a new year suggests to the dealer a time for planning ahead. In business the man who allows to-morrow to take care of itself is not the man to make any great success. The future should be well taken care of and this is true in the grocery business as well as in any other.

A resume of the past year will furnish the basis for consideration of improvements in 1912. Mistakes occurred last year which should not be repeated. By planning ahead and watching the business closely errors and small leaks that have caused loss before can be avoided.

How many times in the past have you said: If I had only foreseen this earlier I would have saved some money! Losses have occurred through not buying at the proper time. There are leaks in bookkeeping, in weighing, in losing goods through unsanitary methods, in delivery, etc., which can be eliminated with forethought.

Advantage should be taken of holidays, special occasions, and seasons to sell extra goods. Methods for doing this should be thought out well ahead of time and the most made of them.

Some writer has said every great institution is the lengthened shadow of a single man. What has made these institutions great has been the ability of the men behind to see into the future and to make the necessary plans to meet the coming conditions.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

Threshing has again been checked throughout the West owing to the extremely cold weather which has arrived with the new moon. During the last week the thermometer has been in the neighborhood of 20 below zero and in many places falls of snow have put a stop to threshing for a week at any rate. As long as the weather remained mild threshing went forward at many points and would have been more general had there appeared to be any chance of getting the grain to the head of the lakes within a few days after it was threshed.

It is now recognized by all that it is unsafe to store newly threshed grain in local elevators for more than a few days owing to the quantity of snow and ice which is mixed with the grain when it comes from the machine. If this cold weather lasts and if storms are now to be of frequent occurrence, there is little doubt that there are many thousands of bushels which will never be threshed in Western Canada.

A conference was held at Fort William recently between those interested in the grain trade and railway representatives, and many important promises were made by the railroads as to remedying unsatisfactory existing conditions.

Several comments are being made regarding the possibility of shipping through southern ports in bond in order to relieve the congestion at the present time. As yet, however, no definite move has been taken, and conditions are being watched with interest.

CONDEMNED BY HER OWN GOODS.

Early in December when some dealers had not received new goods they were selling last year's. The quality of these was not always of the best. Particularly was this true in the case of walnuts in the shell. The Grocer's attention was brought to a specific case which happened in a Western Ontario city, and which bears a somewhat humorous tinge.

A woman customer had purchased some walnuts in an Italian store, the majority of which were found to be of inferior quality. Next time she was on a purchasing trip in this store she wanted more walnuts, but stipulated they must be good, as the last were practically all worm-eaten.

"Oh, yes," said the Italian saleswoman, "these nuts are all good, and just to show you I'll crack one or two."

The first was bravely opened, but it turned out to be bad.

She broke another with a little less confidence, but it, too, had seen better days.

Looking up at the customer with a half smile, and unconscious of any presence of wit, she remarked: "These nuts make me lie."

POINTED EDITORIALS.

The lobster catch of Nova Scotia, which began December 15, is expected to show an increase over that of last year. The season runs to June 15, 1912.

The export of molasses from Barbados up to the middle of October of the years 1910 and 1911 averaged 77,000 puncheons for each year. Of this total of 154,000 puncheons, Canada received 105,000.

No matter how small your business is now, there is no limit to its possible growth and development if you study the best methods of getting more business. Guesswork has no place in the business world of to-day.

Production of eggs is increasing and prices on new laids are easing off. Warm December weather had something to do with this, but so also had the educational campaigns among the farmers. Scientific retailing will bring results just as will scientific farming.

The Commercial Travelers' Association of Canada are united for better hotel accommodation in Ontario. Their campaign is a worthy one, and let us hope their demands will be met. Travelers should have the same protection in hotels as at home, and they are entitled to much better accommodation than they now receive in many Ontario towns and villages.

New Year Plans for Advertising

Retailer Asks How Publicity Can be Made Most Profitable—Suggestions on How Circular Should be Written to Produce Best Returns—Should Contain Straight Business Talk, No Strictly Personal Matter and No Flippancy.

*By Henry Johnson, Jr.

This letter opens up a vein of thought which should result in our realizing extra profits during 1912. Judicious advertising will help us just as much as any other one thing we can do. Maybe I shall touch on some things I have said before, but, also, maybe, they will bear repetition. It is a thoughtful letter :—

Editor Store Management, Canadian Grocer :—

Dear Sir,—We are looking for advice as to the best means of advertising so as to increase our business. We are located in a neighborhood at the outskirts of the city ; beyond and around us are about 1000 homes. We have the largest, best stock in the neighborhood, notwithstanding we have four other stores about us. With the amount of stock we carry we feel our business should be larger. Located, as we are, newspaper ads would not give returns in proportion to the amount invested. For the past two years we have been sending out postal cards every two weeks, changing the line as well as the heading with each issue. Five hundred is the number sent out last two weeks. This, while we receive some returns, does not seem to be just what is wanted to catch business. Any suggestions you may offer will be appreciated.

Yours truly, J. D. & Son.

I feel sure of one thing—that the ads sent out by J. D. & Son are readable, snappy, lively, to the point. For here in just a few lines they have told me all about their own situation ; what advantages they have and what competition is in their way. There is the ring of conviction, of complete faith, in what they say about their store. They have advantages to offer and they know what those advantages are.

Arrange Careful Mailing List.

The problem, then, would seem to be : How to present these points to each of the housewives of those thousand homes so as to carry complete conviction to all of them—as nearly as may be.

The present method, all things considered, is not bad. In fact, I think, such direct, personal appeals, with some modification, will be best for them to continue to use. I should say, first make up your mailing list very carefully so that you may send your cards to just the right people and to all the right people. If there are a thousand homes that you would like to reach, whose occupants would make desirable customers, let your list be 1000. If only 500 are "your kind," limit your list to 500 ; and if any number between those two will best cover the ground, take that number. Remember, that the cost of getting up 500 cards is about the same as printing 1000 ; while, if it pays to spend $5 for postage, it may pay twice as well to spend $10 — and it may not.

Let us next consider the matter to be used. They have not sent me a sample of the cards. Had they done that I might be able to suggest improvements in their present matter. I should like to have one ; but now I should suggest the change from cards to circular letters enclosed in envelopes and mailed for 1c. postage. The only difference in cost will be a trifle for stationery and a little more composition. As the circulars will go out every two weeks, there will be no trouble about getting up enough interesting matter for each letter.

Make Business Offer.

Make no attempt to make these appear as individual, or personal letters. Everybody is now "onto" the imitation letter, in the first place, and, secondly, it is very difficult to make things "hitch" in getting op such a letter. I can illustrate what I mean. Let us say you begin your letter with the suggestion that hitherto you have not been successful in creating interest, as : "We are surprised, and troubled, that we are not able to interest you in our offerings," and send this to a lady who has been trading with you pretty regularly for a year ; you can see that the resulting impression might not be happy. But if, making no attempt to appear personal, you began : "We offer for the next three days," you would appeal to every reader, whether customer, occasional buyer, or utter stranger, alike.

Begin the series—and now I have in mind the man who is going to adopt this method January 1, as much as I think of the present correspondent—with simple, plain offerings of seasonable, up-to-date, interesting items. Your inventory will have revealed some things you should make special effort to clean up—at "any old price" to turn them into live capital. This does not mean that those things need be old, undesirable or in any way inferior ; they are simply not moving rapidly enough, and here is your chance to make a fair inducement in such a way that the concession in price will legitimately go into your advertising, sales-promotion expense. You can thus "turn defeat into victory," reaping a good harvest from what would otherwise be a field of thistles. Lead off with one or two of those things—do not make a big bargain-list of any letter. The plan is to educate the readers to take interest in every letter because of some distinct price-inducement, and then to use that interest to talk about your regular goods and service.* This plan will make your letters an institution whereby you and your customers will be kept steadily in touch with each other. I mean to say that you should always follow the special item or two with offerings at your regular prices, but right prices, of seasonable goods with brief, pithy descriptions, and "talky"—not windy—suggestions as to their special uses, particularly if there be some timely reasons for their purchase and use NOW.

Use Convincing Talks.

Let me emphasize that matter of describing goods. It is of primary importance. We are so accustomed to picture any item in our stock to ourselves from the barest quotation that we are very apt to forget that our customers think of many things besides groceries ; hence such quotations may mean very little to them. On such a staple as canned corn, about which every woman should seem to know, do not say : "B & M Sugar Corn, 14c per can." Say : "Extra tender, very sweet, richly-flavored Sugar Corn ; grown in ——— Ontario, the district famous the world over for this particular article ; B & M packing, which means the very highest grade possible to pack ; per can, 14c ; dozen, $1.65—for this week only." Feature such goods as you may yourselves control—laying stress on their character and quality always. You can talk of these things regularly, steadily, running different items in every letter. A slight concession may often be made, but never offer these at any price which does not pay you a good margin. You are in business for profit, largely, and advertising which does not sell goods at a PROFIT is not properly advertising, nor will it really build trade. It is slower to build than to tear down, but trade-building pays. You expect to stay in business, remember that.

A Snappy Reader.

Here, however, is an example of special offerings that is too snappy for me to pass up : A bright grocer who

Montreal, Jan. 4.—The grocery trade has already left behind another milestone and is putting forward a bold foot in the highway of 1912. The various houses report a good year with a splendid holiday trade, and it only remains now for collections to come in promptly and jobbers will have no regrets for the splendid business that was felt during the past few months of the year. The extensive stocks were ordered, arrived, carted about, sent out to the retail trade, and all this work will be forgotten when the books will show a complete settlement. The present week has been quiet. A few travelers are out, but they are not numerous. Then, again, Monday was a holiday, and Saturday, the feast of the Epiphany, will find many of the houses closed for the day. Thus, only four days remain for active business, and last week was disturbed by the holiday spirit. However, the coming week will find a noticeable return to the former commercialism, and the thoughts of the trade will be bent upon an effort to surpress the records and figures established in 1911. Undoubtedly there has been an advancement in the trade during the past year, particularly among retailers. The next twelve months should find the trade progressing in proportion, following the grocery markets closely and doing their share toward elevating the business to the plane it deserves.

SUGAR.—The holiday trade overlooked sugar to a certain extent, and while an ordinary demand was felt this market was otherwise quiet. Prices have remained at the $5.65 basis, although it is difficult to tell how long it will remain at that figure. Expectations of lower prices prevail and buying is of the light order that is noticeable at such times.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—The molasses market remains firm with prices steady. As the winter season advances stocks should run low before the first shipments of the summer. Syrup is enjoying a good run now and, to the retailer, offers but little difficulty for a seasonable selling effort at any time.

DRIED FRUIT.—Valencia raisins are quite firm, and will likely be quoted at a higher price should the demand be sustained. Supplies are said to have passed entirely out of first hands. Dates of the new crop are quoted a little lower this week with the passing of holiday season. Currants are firm in sympathy with the stronger reports from Greece. There is not a great deal of interest in apricots and peaches these days. Prunes are firm, and in short compass. One report says that out of a crop af 160,000,000 to 170,000,000 pounds there are left but 350 cars or approximately 7,000 tons.

NUTS.—There are several changes to be noted in this market for the week. Shelled walnuts are up two cents a pound and pecans up at least one cent a pound. Prices should surely go higher before the new crop is on the market. The holiday trade was reported a good one and it was apparent that the old custom is not dying out.

CANNED GOODS.

MONTREAL.—Jobbers who have run short of prominent lines of canned goods filled up with purchases from across the border. Golden wax and Refugee beans, for instance, ran short, but were replaced by imported goods. Likewise tomatoes and peas were purchased with a view to tiding over the coming year's demand. However, with raspberries, blueberries, etc., lines that are higher than the rest, some will not try to replace them, considering such a move but a loss of money, unnecessarily. Present enquiry is not heavy.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Hallowee Dates — Third shipment lower.

Prunes—Strong on Coast.

Shelled Walnuts — Primary market higher.

Brazils—Market bare of stocks.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Another successful year for the Canadian grocery trade has been left behind and entry made into another period of endeavor. With a great many dealers, both retail and wholesale, it not only marks the opening of another calendar year but of their business year as well. A good many jobbers have taken advantage of the temporary lull after the holiday rush to take the annual inventory, while this has not been uncommon in the retail trade either.

This week, trade has shown a tinge of quietness, especially when compared with amount of business that has been rolling in during the previous weeks. Holiday goods have seen their day and interest has not yet been revived in staples.

Compared with other years, however, 1912 has opened up well. Travelers are again back on the road and orders should soon be coming in from the country.

SUGAR.—Sugar situation to-day is practically a repeat of that of last week with lower prices being looked forward to. One sugar man stated it was felt New York was pitted for another easing off and that it was quite possible such decline would start Canadian prices downward.

DRIED FRUITS.—Immediate changes in dried fruits are practically nil this week but there are several lines which display features of interest, mostly all denoting strengthening tendency. Dates are an exception however, for although prices remain the same, arrival of the third shipment is expected soon and prices will rule somewhat easier on Hallowees.

Spot currants hold steady under strong statistical position held. Steadiness is also apparent in Valencia raisins. A report from the Coast says that prunes are held at a material advance this week over last by all operators. Nearly all holders are firm at the outside quotations.

Demand for peels with the passing of the holiday will form but a small item.

NUTS.—Much less interest is displayed in nuts than prior to the festive season. Shelled varieties are expected to receive just as much prominence as ever. Shelled walnuts for January shipment were quoted considerably below to-day's price at one time, but primary market has been on upward trend, so that prices are most likely to rule steady. Almonds as stated before, are not without signs of continued steadiness. The market is practically bare of Brazils.

RICE AND TAPIOCA.—There have been no price changes. In primary markets rice holds a firm position in all lines. The effects of the decreased crops of last year is shown in the fact that Standard B, quoted one year ago at $3, is now $3.75 per cwt. Demand is normal from retailers.

BEANS.—The market for beans is quiet and while dealers in some parts of Dominion think prices should come down from their high position, those who believe that they will be well maintained are not few. They point to the small stocks held at producing centres and the fact that the consumption in Canada is steadily growing larger. There are reports of imports into Canada of foreign beans.

EVAPORATED APPLES.—"Evaps" are steady in price with the steadiness more marked of late as there has been more enquiries from European sources with some business resulting. Quotations rule at 9½ to 10 cents.

TORONTO.—There are no special features to report in canned goods this week. Most lines are considered good property. In fact, there are few, if any, likely to lose money for their possessor.

Trade in canned goods is quiet. It has been among the neglected staples during the holiday rush. Retailers, while not holding overly large stocks, are buying lightly just now. With the completion of stock-taking, purchasing will probably become heavier.

No relief in tomatoes can be expected from the United States. Prices are still climbing there and $1.15 is the price for spot 3's of desirable pack as against as low as 82 to 85 cents early in the fall.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar.—Weaker.

Syrup.—Firming up.

Prunes.—Firmer.

Coffee.—Steady.

Split Peas.—Firm.

Winnipeg, Jan. 4.—Last week for first time in many months the local wholesale houses had what might be termed "a week off." As stated in last week's issue, on account of holiday season salesmen were off the road. The result is that wholesalers have had to depend on mail orders this week and while these have been exceptionally heavy when conditions are taken into consideration, yet of course they were not heavy enough to keep all staffs busy.

Now that the Christmas rush is over spring lines are being looked after and a general revision of the trade for the year is being summed up. No detailed information could be secured as regards the exact conditions as yet, but it is understood that the volume of trade transacted will be considerably ahead of what it was last year.

SUGAR.—The sugar market continues to show signs of weakness, although no decline has taken place during week. Wholesalers feel very pessimistic regarding strength of market and they are looking for a decline in the near future owing to existing market conditions.

EVAPORATED APPLES.—Owing to tightening of supplies in the east, market here has firmed up considerably and higher prices are looked for shortly. As yet, however, the price of 10c flat Winnipeg is still in existence.

NUTS.—The busy season for these lines is of course over but still there is a fair demand from retailers for all kinds. It is expected that an increase will also be seen in volume of trade transacted in these lines when this year's trade is compared with last year's.

DRIED FRUITS.—There is little new in the dried fruit market this week except that prunes have advanced ½c per lb., and in the opinion of the local wholesalers they will soar to much higher prices in immediate future. There was an exceptionally heavy Christmas demand in all these lines, especially raisins, but prices hold steady at last week's quotations.

PEAS AND BEANS.—A difference of opinion also exists in prices quoted on split peas at present time. Last week reference was made to one large wholesaler stating that this line was worth 4½c a lb. This week, however, another wholesaler quoted them at 4c a lb. and stated that this is high enough for this week. Beans are also strong and in good demand.

BUTTER.—Butter is holding steady at present time and quotations remain unchanged from last week. Supplies are by no means larger, yet it was expected recently that decline would take place within week or two. Such, however, is not likely to be the case on account of change of weather, and as January is always a stormy month it is quite possible that an advance will be noticed shortly.

EGGS.—The high price of Christmas season still continues to prevail for fresh eggs and 35 to 40c a doz. is still being quoted for Manitoba fresh, cases returned. Storage eggs are quoted at 25 to 32c.

CHEESE.—Cheese is in same condition as it was two weeks ago, Ontario cheese being the only one quoted at 16¾ to 17c lb. Local cheese is reported to be scarce and unprocurable in many cases.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Jan. 4.—Business with most grocers, wholesale and retail, was quiet last week, the general lull following the rush of Christmas week. There are no complaints, however, as in almost every case, dealers report their business to have been much larger than last year, particularly during the holiday season, when the people seemed well supplied with cash, and purchased freely. They are looking forward expectantly to making a good start for the New Year. Many of the wholesalers at present are engaged in stock-taking, but with retailers, most of them will wait until the dull season, which in St. John generally falls toward the latter part of January.

As regards markets, there is little to be said, as quietness prevails. Beans, both yellow and hand-picked, are easier, and oatmeal has declined as well. Ontario flour is marked ten cents higher. Aside from these there are no changes of interest.

Annual Staff Gatherings

Gunns, Limited.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—On Friday night last, the traveling salesmen and heads of departments of Gunns, Limited, West Toronto, were entertained on the occassion of the annual dinner at McConkey's. F. M. Moffat, the manager, presided, and speeches, songs and stories were indulged in. Among the travelers of the firm present were the following: F. W. Boynton, S. Douglas, E. H. Duncan, G. W. King, Jno. Reed, R. L. Lennox, G. G. Maskell, Geo. Wilkinson, J. W. Kennedy, J. F. Taylor, S. Peacock, R. Evans, B. Cope and F. W. Musgrave.

A feature of the evening were a number of reminiscences by B. Cope, Sr., who has been 37 years with the firm.

Mooney Biscuit and Candy Co.

Stratford, Ont., Jan. 4.—Last week the eastern salesmen of the Mooney Biscuit & Candy Co. held a conference, which was wound up by a dinner on Friday night, tendered by the company. W. J. Mooney, president and manager, occupied the chair, and proposed the toasts, assisted by G. Noble, assistant manager. During the evening Mr. Mooney was presented with a handsome club bag equipped with military brushes, etc., and also a pipe and case.

The pack of Hawaiian pineapples this year was 750,000 cases. This pack was not sufficient to cover the demand.

A DEALER WHO CREATES SALES.

Pushes Fruit Syrups, Cocoa, Chocolate, etc., at This Season of Year.

St. John, N. B., Jan. 4—(Special)—"While there may be several lines upon which a grocer may specialize at this season of the year," said a local grocer this week, "I know of one kind of sales which have proven beneficial to me in past years, and which I intend featuring in the same way again this year. I am speaking of fruit syrups, cocoa, chocolate and other commodities popular with the ladies as part of light refreshments to offer to guests.

"I have found it profitable to let my women customers know I have just purchased some nice new fruit syrups, pineapple, lime, lemon, etc., or that my stock of cocoa or chocolate should be sampled, and I have caused my clerks to see that few customers leave the store without the suggestion having been made that they take with them something in these lines for their callers. These lines I feature until about the second week in January."

PROVISION FIRMS UNITE.

Montreal, Jan. 4.—News of another amalgamation in the local produce and provision world has been announced. Geo. Hodge & Son and Gunn, Langlois & Co., have joined forces, the firm in future to be known as Geo. Hodge & Son, Limited, affiliated with Gunn, Langlois & Co. The nominal capital is $100,000. These two firms control a large percentage of export butter and cheese business.

SUGAR DOWN AGAIN.

Sugar declined another 10 cents about Thursday noon, too late to have the announcement appear in The Grocer's market page, as the paper had gone to press. Market figures quoted should therefore be read 10 cents lower.

The J. F. Richardson grocery, Elora, Ont., has been undergoing repairs and alterations, chief of which was the removal of the dividing wall and the substitution of pillars, making a square store with an uninterrupted view of all parts, permitting a better display of goods. The changes are now completed. A small office has been arranged about the centre of the store. The pillars have been covered with oak, the lower portion having mirrors on the four sides, with double electric light fixtures on each of the two pillars, the mirrors serving as reflectors.

Turkeys Took a Drop in British Columbia

End of Christmas Week Saw Plenty on Market—Dealers Anxious to Get Rid of Them—Potatoes Take Another Advance—Eggs on the Downward Path—Now Coming from California.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 4.—(Special)—Holiday business this year was good, perhaps a little better than last year. Grocers generally shared in the larger trade. The supply of goods arrived in fine condition and the excellent quality attracted customers. Japanese oranges this season came in smaller boxes, jobbing at 40 cents. A larger box was quoted at 45 cents. This difference created some dissatisfaction, because buyers of the larger box thought they were being charged more when they compared their purchase with buyers of the smaller. The difference in price was not taken into account at first. The reason given for the two sizes is to have a smaller box on the market as a more attractive buy. It has not worked well, for it is felt that the difference in price has not compensated for the difference in size. Many patrons did not know of the two sizes until they complained to their dealer that the box this year was smaller than last year.

Potatoes Going Up in B. C.

Potatoes have gone up another peg, and retail now at $2.25 per sack. It is confidently expected that by spring they will be away high, as usual. The nip of frost at the beginning of November, accompanied by several inches of snow, caught many potatoes, and it is estimated that in the Chilliwack district 5,000 bags were damaged.

With the last steamer from Australia, New Zealand butter arrived in some quantity and of good quality. It jobs at 40 cents. This butter is from the fresh grass, and coming at this time of year is specially welcome. Some find fault with it because it lacks in salt. New Zealand eggs are coming by the boat that will arrive early in January.

Eastern butter is quoted at 34 cents wholesale, rising from 32 to 33 cents. Demand from retailers is strong. All butters are high. Vancouver creamery stands at 38 cents, and Cowichan at 48. Cowichan is sold at 60 cents retail.

Eggs are coming down a little. After Christmas, the demand is not so heavy, and eggs start to come in from the south. Californias are already on the market, quoted at 48 cents, and eggs will be here from Kansas ere long. Fresh new laids can be had by dealers at 60 cents, retailing at 70, while eastern are at 30 cents.

Plenty of Turkeys.

The price of turkeys did not remain altogether at 35 cents retail. The supply was unlimited, and choice birds were easily obtained. In all the leading stores they were quoted at 35 cents, with 30 cents in some of the departmentals, and on Saturday evening before Christmas, the price was dropped several cents in an effort to clear out as much stock as possible. One large provision firm is under contract with an Eastern Canadian shipping house to take one million pounds of fowl annually. This would give an idea of how many fowls come to Vancouver, for this firm, while doing a large trade, are not the only large dealers, several merchants, especially grocers, doing a handsome business along this line.

NEW YEAR PLANS FOR ADVERTISING.

does a cash business and does not deliver, says - "Do you read my circulars? I am going to find out next week, so I am placing on sale 35 cases of extra standard Tomatoes, regularly sold (and fully worth) 12c the can. These I shall sell—next Wednesday, July 11—for 7c the can. Remember—Wednesday only—and for 7c." You need not copy the price, but you might profitably use that gingery talking style, and work in some of those expressions on special offerings. It is great to depart from the hackneyed, labored phraseology; but you will carefully note that flippancy is even worse. There is nothing flippant about this example; it would not offend anybody's sensibilities. This dividing line is often hard to draw, but in any good advertising is so unmistakably there that nobody can miss it.

All of which always finally leads me to the remark that true advertising is the highest form of written art. To the earnest student, who gives it time and thought, it will yield richly; but it is a jealous mistress and will have no trifling.

STANDARD WEIGHT FOR POTATOES.

Hamilton Dealer Wants it 75 Pounds—His Reasons for Same.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—Some time since I noticed through the press that the government had decided to pass an act applying to the whole Dominion, legalizing the weight of a bag of potatoes at 80 lbs. Now with all due deference to their wisdom in adopting this course, and no doubt it was done after due deliberation, I think that available information might have been produced which would show that the public of Canada were more in favor of a measure making 75 lbs. the standard.

Various reasons may be advanced for the latter proposition, two of which are the convenience of handling by big boys and elderly men, and the using of the hundred pound sugar bags which are now practically worthless to all. These will hold 75 lbs. of potatoes nicely, and when the farmer delivers his load, fresh bags may be given him, thus saving both his and the grocer's time, as emptying bags of potatoes has ever been a source of trouble to the merchant. This will be appreciated both by the farmer and himself, and as soon as the farmer tries the new weight at 75 lbs. I think he will be delighted to think that the merchants of Canada have been progressive enough to advocate such a bill.

This question has been thoroughly discussed by the Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association and resolutions passed in its favor; a committee was appointed to wait on the local members, Messrs. Barker and Stewart, both of whom pledged themselves to give it their hearty support, admitting that from the reasons advanced it appealed to them as a bit of legislation that would be a benefit to all, farmer, merchant and consumer.

It appears to me that if every merchant in Canada who goes into this question thoroughly and sees the benefits to be derived therefrom, he will take the trouble to at once see the member for his riding and get his pledge to support the same. It will then soon be settled that 75 lbs. is standard weight for potatoes all over Canada: and if the bill is passed, the benefits to be derived will be such that the grocers and their clerks will bless the man who originated the idea and who has spent hours of his valuable time in promoting the same: and when they decide to honor him in whatever form it may take, the inscription should be for Adam Ballentine, of Hamilton, Ont.

The New Pittsburg Coal Co. adopts this ever-popular Account Register in all of their stores

THE KEITH SYSTEM DISPLACES OTHER SO-CALLED ACCOUNT REGISTERS AFTER FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL

One-writing. Self-Indexing. Fire-Proof.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

Mr. H. S. Mervin, Auditor of the New Pittsburg Coal Co., whose wide experience qualifies him as a competent judge of account systems, after having given a competing register a fair trial, came to this conclusion, viz., that to hunt a customer's name under a glass, find a number, locate a page, then to open the register and search out a small spring bearing a corresponding number, was a waste of valuable time for a corporation such as The New Pittsburg Coal Co.

THE KEITH SELF-INDEX SYSTEM is free from the above complications. Any number of salespeople may operate it at the same time if necessary.

Mr. Mervin saw its advantages.

Partnerships and Limited Companies

Important Question Submitted by Reader—Why Limited Liability Corporation is Safer To Shareholders Than a Simple Partnership—Former is Secured Through Legal Operations.

Editor Canadian Grocer: — Will you kindly explain the meaning of the word "Limited" as applied to a limited company; also how limited companies are formed and what are the necessary legal proceedings, etc.

The above information and any thing else that may occur to you in connection with same will much oblige.

S. J. MILLER.

Toronto, Ont.

Editorial Note.—This reader raises a very interesting question well worth discussing. There are many dealers who do not appreciate the difference between a simple partnership and a limited liability company.

Any member in a partnership is liable for all the debts of a firm, no matter what member or agent of the firm contracts them. Limited liability or joint stock companies are, as the name implies, namely, any member of the company is liable only for the amount of stock which he has bought. That is, if he has bought and fully paid for $500 worth of stock he cannot be held for any more no matter if the firm should fail for many thousand dollars. Banks are, of course, not limited liability companies, as there is a double liability in this case. For example, if a man buys $100 (par value) of stock he is liable, in case the bank fails, to a further payment of $100.

Necessary Proceedings.

To form a limited liability company proper forms have to be secured from the Provincial Secretary of Ontario, and five shareholders are necessary to make application to the Ontario Government for a Provincial charter. For a company up to $40,000 capital a fee of $100 is payable. If you intend to form a company it would probably be wise to consult your solicitor so that everything might be done in order. If you do not wish to do this, if you secure or borrow a copy of Ward's "Shareholders and Directors Manual," it will give full information.

The company is always to give public notice in its advertising and elsewhere that it is a limited liability company, so that creditors may know that the partners are not individually liable for the debts of the firm.

In case of partnership, therefore, an error in business judgment on part of any partner; a contract signed or even an oral agreement made by a partner through haste, inadvertence or mistake; the error of a clerk, or carelessness of an employe, may mean the loss of everything.

A company's creditors, however, cannot make its shareholders bankrupt because of that company's liabilities. If it gets into difficulties it will be wound up voluntarily or otherwise, and the creditors can take the company's property and assets, but nothing more.

Meaning of a Company.

By a company is meant an association of many persons who contribute money or its worth to a common stock and employ it in some trade or business and who share the profit or loss arising therefrom. The common stock so contributed is denoted in money and is the capital of the company. Those who contribute it are Members or Shareholders. The proportion of capital to which each member is entitled is his Share. Shares are always transferable although the right to transfer them is often more or less restricted. A company cannot be formed like a partnership merely by the agreement or contract of the parties. Its creation must be expressly authorized by law and evidenced by an act, letters patent or certificate granted by the state.

A Corporator is one of those to whom a charter is granted or of those who file a certificate of incorporation under a general incorporating statue. A Subscriber is one who has agreed to take stock from the corporation. A Shareholder in Canada means the same thing as a stockholder and the terms are used interchangeably to indicate one who owns stock in a company and has been accepted as a stockholder.

Any other definite information will be gladly furnished by The Grocer except where it stands as a matter of law.

Have you ever thought that a great many grocers needlessly limit the sale of

to the Christmas season and thereby suggest to their trade that mince meat is only good to eat at that particular time?

Has it ever occured to you that these grocers are throwing away money just as much so as if they took cash from the till and threw it down the sewer?

Think it over. It is worth while.

Is there one real good, live reason why it should be so? Especially so when our mince meat is procurable.

Early Increase in Egg Production

Educative Work Among Farmers Has Helped Great Deal—United States Eggs Come to Canada—Butter Loses None of its Firmness—Pork Products Not Brisk During Past Few Weeks—Last Week's Poultry Situation Varies at Different Centres.

The hen is getting industrious early in the season this year. Egg production is beginning to show an increase at a much earlier date than usual. The mild weather during the greater part of December, no doubt, accounts in part for this, but educative work being carried on among the farmers in recent years must also receive some credit. This increase is hardly discernable at some country points, but receipts at the larger market centres are ahead of last year.

A goodly quantity of eggs are coming into Canada from United States points. British Columbia reports an easier feeling. New Zealand stock is now coming, while California's are already on the market, and Kansas' expected before long. The easier prices on new-laids should induce much larger sales.

The butter market seems to have lost none of its steadiness. At many country points, dealers are receiving barely enough to supply their own requirements. Receipts of creamery also continue irregular, and at the large market centres stocks held are light. British Columbia is now receiving supplies from New Zealand.

Pork products are as yet inclined to quietness. Lard is in fair request. Live hogs have varied little during past week, but receipts were quite light at most points.

Poultry situation varied considerably at different Dominion centres during last week. For instance, at Toronto the market was almost completely cleaned, in some cases at slightly higher prices, especially for turkeys. On the contrary, in Montreal, with colder weather, supplies increased, and turkeys and chickens eased off, but geese, on account of the limited supply, held up under good sales. On the whole through the holiday poultry trade has been quite gratifying.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—Trade in provisions has been rather quiet during the past few weeks under the influence of holiday season. Live hogs are firm at $6.75 and dressed at from 9½ to 9¾. There should be a brisk demand for pork, beginning at any time now. Lard is steady and unchanged.

BUTTER.—The butter market occupies practically the same position as that of week ago. Receipts are comparing favorably with a year ago, the present figures being larger.

Dairy, tubs, lb	0 24 0 27

CHEESE.—There has been little or no movement in cheese during holiday week. The market is strong for reasons already referred to decreasing stocks, a fairly steady export demand and a good local trade being responsible.

EGGS.—As was intimated in last week's report of the market, eggs have declined at least five cents. Reports are beginning to come in quite freely with advices in regard to sending in supplies of new laids which appear to be in more liberal supply, and coming in earlier than usual this year. The market will soon lose its strong position if these conditions of supply are continued as is expected. The demand for eggs is steady and considerable, and goods are moving freely as supplies are more numerous. The price is fairly firm at the new figure.

POULTRY.—There proved to be an ample supply of holiday poultry at prices that should have proved acceptable to the majority of buyers. Prices were fairly well maintained, but previous to New Year's the price eased off slightly. On the whole the market may be called satisfactory. It was generally understood beforehand that supplies would be fairly free and besides it is believed that few if any retailers were caught, as the conditions of the market suggested caution. The recent colder weather has helped the market.

PROVISIONS.—As natural for this time of the year, briskness is lacking in the provision trade. Even lard which has been going out freely is quite quiet. Smoked hams are reduced ½ to 1 cent per pound this week. This is by no means a season of brisk sale for smoked products. Live hogs are resting at last week's level but receipts are comparatively light.

BUTTER.—The fact that butter production has been on a small scale for some time is well known. Demand from retailers has been fairly good and stocks held are small, accounting for a firmer tendency which has amounted to an advance ranging around 1 cent per pound on most lines. There seems nothing at present to break the firmness.

heavier than at this time other years, explainable by the mild weather of December, while the educative work that is being carried on among the farmers is also probably partly accountable. Prices which for a time were practically prohibitive have now come down within the reach of the fairly well to do householder and more business will no doubt be induced.

Storage eggs hold fairly steady as stocks can by no means be said to be heavy. Prices in United States markets just now will not any more than allow them to be imported so as to bring a profit.

POULTRY.—Following a fairly close clean up of stocks of poultry previous to Christmas Day came good demand for supplies for the New Year's trade. Sales were perhaps better than us usual for New Year's. No doubt the colder weather helped considerably in this regard. As result decks were well cleared, in some cases particularly turkeys at slightly increased prices.

Turkeys, geese and ducks will now be shifted to background, the Christmas holiday seemingly being their special season. However, they will find a certain demand. Chickens will no doubt be in keener request and are expected to rule steady.

Confectionery Trade Has Been Good

During Past Year as Well as During Holiday Season—Showing an Annual Increase—Dealers Should Plan Now to Secure Their Share During 1912—Rolled Oats Steady at Last Week's Decline—In Regard to Flour, Much Depends on Argentine.

The holiday trade in confectionery is generally conceded to have been good this year. Retailers on the whole were well pleased, stocks having been well cleaned up. Manufacturers of confections report the past year a record one, the sale of sweetmeats in Canada showing a goodly increase every year. Another feature is the increasing demand for high grade goods.

Now is the time the dealer should make his plans to coral his share of the confectionery business of 1912. This line should not be allowed to drop with the passing of the holiday season for even during January by proper attention gratifying results may be secured.

Neither flour or cereals show any change in price this week. With last week's decline, it is felt that rolled oats have probably hit the bottom. Trade during the past few weeks has been decidedly under the holiday blanket and is quiet even yet. In the shaping of the flour market much is said to depend on Argentine. Conflicting reports continue to come forward from that republic.

The International Agricultural Institute's report on Russian wheat indicates a drop of 114,000,000 bushels as compared with the previous month's estimate. The 1911 wheat crop for countries so far reported aggregating 3,132,267,000 bushels is 98.6 per cent. of that of last year.

Broomhall's Argentine correspondents estimate the probable exportable surplus at 120,000,000 bushels. This forecasts a crop of 160 to 165 million bushels as against his August estimate of 185,000,000 bushels. Last year's official estimate was 136,319,000,000 bushels

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—No change has been reported in the flour market. Prices remain steady at former figures and with a good seasonable demand the market appears to have a strong tone that should hold for a while at any rate.

The holiday rush has once more been left behind and retailer will have more time to give to this line. The dealer who pushes cereals during the present favorable weather should get good results.

GOOD HAMILTON HOLIDAY TRADE

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 4.—(Special)—A record was established among Hamilton grocers during the Christmas season. December sales were more than doubled in many cases and as the grocers here are rather thrifty and farsighted, they took advantage of the strong markets in certain goods, as intimated by The Canadian Grocer, and made early purchases. This, with a splendid business, has enabled them to show a larger margin of profit than usual, and as Hamilton is largely populated by people from the Land of the Heather, and as a majority of the trade are lineal descendants of Scottish ancestors you can readily understand what they will do with the surplus.

Lull Follows in Wake of Holiday Rush

First Week in January Finds Temporary Quietness in Fruit Trade—Cold Weather in California Frosts Some Orange Groves and Affects Celery—Florida Celery Expected Around Middle of Month—Potatoes Hold Steady — Staples Should Now Come to Front.

Like the proverbial calm after the storm, a lull in the fruit and vegetable trade after the rush during the festive season is only a natural result. New Year's trade as gleaned from reports from various sections of the Dominion was appreciable in volume. Consumptive demand for fruits this week sagged off, while retailers are endeavoring to clear out any odd lots which may have been left. No doubt trade will shortly react to normal again.

One news feature this week is the cold weather which has been prevailing in California. Several of the orange groves were nipped and there will probably be some damage. Adverse effects were particularly felt in the low lands.

Celery was also frosted in California. This line was already none too plentiful, so that now no abundant supply can be looked for. Prices are high and the amount of celery imported into Canada will no doubt be limited until Florida is ready, which is expected to be about the middle of January. This is earlier than usual for shipments to Canada. Although Florida stock is usually on United States markets by this time, Canada generally prefers California as long as possible on account of the size of the heads. Florida in sympathy with California stock will rule high.

More interest should from now on be taken in the more staple lines. Onions have been neglected. Home grown variety are inclined to scarcity, so Spanish should later meet with good sales. In Europe under the quietness there is a slightly easier tendency in Spanish onions.

Potatoes in Eastern Canada hold steady. In Manitoba prices are slightly firmer, while they have recently moved up another notch in British Columbia. Early frosts caught a considerable quantity in the sunset province.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—Prices of green fruits are fairly liberal following the holiday. The range of prices for apples is lower and also for lemons and oranges. The market has been rather quiet following New Year's, but soon showed signs of reviving.

GREEN FRUITS.—The early January lull which generally follows in wake of festive season is making itself felt just now. There was an appreciable demand from retailers for fruits for the New Year's trade, but this week opened quite quiet.

The cranberry supply continues to acquire smaller proportions and prices accordingly continue to harden up. From $14 to $15 is being asked this week for Cape Cods and Jerseys. Nova Scotias are quoted at $8 per barrel.

Pineapples are firmer at $4 per case. Navel oranges will receive the major portion of attention from now on.

been decidedly satisfactory and volume is reckoned to be far ahead of last year. The list of fruits offered at present time is not large but prices have in many instances shown a downward tendency and oranges and lemons are quoted at $2 per case less than they were a month ago. California Tokay grapes and Valencia oranges are off market, while Jersey cranberries are still being offered, but it is expected that trade in this line will fall off considerably before another week or two is out.

GREEN VEGETABLES.—Another advance is noticed in prices prevailing for green vegetables at present time and imported lines are fast replacing home grown lines. Sales over Christmas holidays have been exceptionally good and all are satisfied with results. With extreme cold weather that is setting in at the present time it is expected higher prices will be seen, as owing to mild weather of last five weeks supplies were able to reach the city in good shape, but it is likely that a lot of frozen lines will arrive within next two weeks and will consequently be unfit for high class trade.

Weather Before Xmas Causes Big Loss

One Firm Report a Loss of $11,000—Not Alone Were Sales Smaller Than Usual, But Fish Spoiled on Dealers' Hands—January Trade Has Opened Fairly Well Despite Quietness Generally Apparent at This Time—Halibut Scarce in British Columbia.

A good start has been made on the January fish trade. Despite the quietness generally present for a time after the holiday season, trade this week has held at a level which gives no cause for complaint. Weather is more favorable, retailers have more time to give over to this line and it is accordingly progressing favorably.

A good volume of trade is anticipated from now on, and should not be long in developing good speed. January and February generally see big sales, while the Lenten season is only about seven weeks distant.

A report to The Grocer from British Columbia says halibut was never so scarce as it is at the present. While the fishing is generally poor at this time of the year it seems more so than usual this year and boats are returning with small catches. Frozen halibut is plentiful, however, in that province.

Trade in fish previous to the holidays was by no means all to be desired. The sales sheets of wholesale houses plainly denote this. One firm state they lost $11,000 on account of warm weather before Christmas. Not alone were sales small but fish spoiled on dealers' hands.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—The January fish trade despite the quietness which generally follows in wake of a holiday season has opened up quite satisfactorily. For one thing weather is more favorable for business than some time ago. All lines seem to be sharing fairly well in present sales. Oysters were good sellers during the week between Christmas and New Year's. The next two months are expected to be productive of a good brisk trade in fish.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—There has not yet been much movement in fish. Prices are practically unchanged and the festive season was not exactly a good one for fish. The latter was, generally speaking, much neglected while the annual turkey was enjoyed. By the middle of this month there should be a big fish trade felt, particularly as seasonable weather must be felt then. In the meantime there is an ordinary trade which should begin to assume large proportions in at least another week when the trade will have to begin preparations for Lent.

and some of the steamers have been laid up for overhauling. The wholesale price ranges from 7 to 9 cents, the highest quotation yet for halibut. It is not at all probable that the halibut is being thinned out, for the boats have to go further north than ever after the fish, and where big catches were once made none can now be caught. At this season of the year, however, halibut are never so plentiful as a little later on. The habits of this fish have never been studied on this coast, but it is presumed that they must go off into deeper water, perhaps for spawning purposes. Halibut are fished all the year round, so it is little wonder if the supply in time becomes exhausted.

Frozen halibut is plentiful, since catches in the fall were large. It is quoted at 7 cents.

Frozen salmon is not in plenty, the quotation ranging from 8 to 12c. The season of 1911, and high price paid by canners. Canned salmon calls for a good price, and every effort was made to get as many fish as possible. That left fewer for frozen fish industry.

January Fruit Window Will Sell Goods

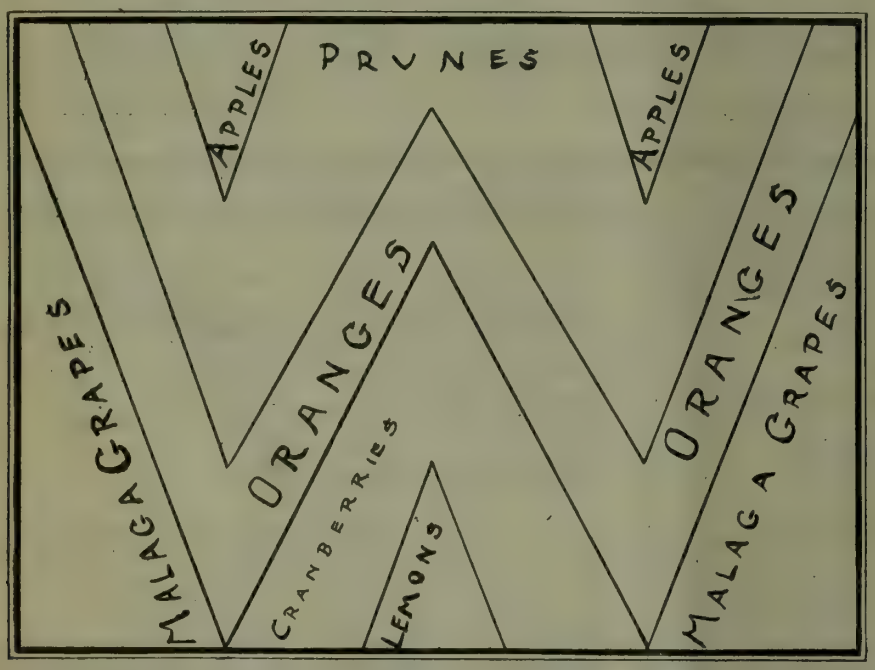
A Suggestion Submitted That Can be Worked Out With Little Trouble—Give Some Attention to Color Effects—Make Window a Stimulant to Sales This Month.

During January the dealer should continue to keep everlastingly at window displays. The policy of resting on the oars after the holiday rush because things are naturally a little quiet is a poor excuse. Trade will come to your store if you meet it a little more than half way. Every large successful dealer knows that had he waited for actual demand instead of getting busy and creating business he would not be in the financial position he is to-day.

Attractive windows always are necessary to best selling results. Change the window at least every week. Lead customers to expect something new, tasty and worth studying. Give them a change. Elbert Hubbard says there is nothing permanent but change. Applying this to the grocery window, it becomes permanent when it is changed—make it a permanent asset.

Simple, But Attractive Display.

Herewith is suggested a January display of green and dried fruits. During the month there are plenty of opportunities to sell oranges, lemons, prunes, cranberries, malaga grapes, table raisins, apples, etc. This design will be found to look particularly well.



Green and Dried Fruit Window Which can be Easily Arranged and Which will Look Particularly Well.

The oranges arranged three wide on the floor of window with two row on top between will form a striking setting with a color that immediately attracts attention. Care should be taken to have them neatly placed showing no ragged edges.

Above the oranges, prunes are suggested and in the V shaped spaces at top of window red apples might be placed. This would tend to make an effective color scheme—oranges, prunes, red apples—the contrast being marked.

In the inverted V shaped space at bottom lemons are suggested which with cranberries between them and the oranges, should enhance the general appearance. Malaga grapes, table raisins or nuts can be used in the lower corners.

V Shape for Small Window.

For a small window the W shaped space allowed for oranges could be changed to a large V with a smaller one in the top centre and the sides and lower corners filled with something red or black. The effect is sure to attract attention.

By using display cards and one or two price tickets the selling value of the window will be enhanced.

This suggestion may call to mind some similar arrangement that can be used with advantage. The point is that the dealer should make January a better month than last year; it should be better than it would be if demand is simply waited for. If the windows are carefully attended to, as during the weeks prior to Christmas, business will be given an extra stimulant worth while.

OPPOSITION TO PHONE RATES.

Winnipeg Merchants Say the New Tariffs Are an Imposition.

Winnepeg, Jan. 4. — (Special.) — The Retail Merchants' Association has come out against the new telephone tariffs as proposed by the telephone commission and seconded by the provincial ministry.

The chair was taken by President John Dyke and the meeting was simply a protest against the proposed rates. The unanimous opinion of the members as revealed in the many speeches and the warm endorsation given remarks condemanatory of the proposal was that the rates were an imposition and injurious to the best interests of business.

A motion that W. T. Devlin, J. B. Coyle, John Dyke and G. J. Hyndman be appointed to enquire into the peoposed rates and to report back at the earliest possible moment was carried unanimously. The next meeting will have the same business to consider and will be at the call of the president.

After the meeting members of the association went over to the Garry exchange and for two hours toured the building and watched the detailed workings of telephone administration. They were interested in what they saw and the committee will get down to its labors with a much more intelligent interest than would otherwise be possible.

Auto Delivery Curtails Delivery Expenses

Service is one of the main features which determines a merchant's patronage, with delivery the most important part. Merchants are more and more beginning to realize the many points in favor of automobile delivery, because it brings them more business and because it is cheaper than any other method.

The Menard Commercial Car

has been designed to meet the demand, and is a quiet car of great reliability, reasonable speed, with a large reserve of power and a frame of strength and size capable of carrying a load of considerable bulk and up to 1500 lbs. weight.

The design of tires used on the Menard Commercial Cars reduces the cost of maintaining tires to a nominal sum. There are many other features of the Menard that will impress it upon merchants for its superiority above all others.

Send for prices and full particulars.

Sales MUST Repeat

Over nine hundred thousand housewives now use FIVE ROSES—
Because it has the Selling Ability.
The same difference that exists between a counter attendant and a good salesman.

Do YOU know what that means?
Just this—
That the first bag must sell the second.

Advertising has a tremendous driving force—yet it can sell only one bag.

Your own salesmanship can make only first sales—trial orders.

The flour itself must have the compelling magnetic influence that draws irresistibly the customer back in spite of price and favor.

Twenty-three years ago there were —all told—only 800 barrels of FIVE ROSES flour sold in the world.

To-day there flows out of the big FIVE ROSES mills a constant uniform stream—10,500 barrels a day. Can any sane person deny in the face of such brutal facts that FIVE ROSES must possess a compelling sales force?

FIVE ROSES will not sell itself—no flour will.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

But once introduced, Brother Grocer, your trade is riveted for all time.

A woman can no more give up the FIVE ROSES habit than she can abandon her keen ambition for better baking.

Consider merely the dollar-and-cents side—just think how safe your trade might be—

If YOU could sell FIVE ROSES flour.

Maybe you can—maybe you can't, for we don't sell everybody, remember that.

Write our nearest office—perhaps we can come together.

Write NOW.

Dear Sirs,—

Last week I bought in a local shop a tin of raspberries packed by your company, the first we ever tasted in this country. We found them superb, a real delicacy. Only the high prices of preserved fruits in this part of the world prevents us to indulge in the better sorts except very occasionally. The idea struck me that, were you willing to directly deal with us, we might get a consignment of your fruits at so reasonable a price that we might have one or more tins of your fruits daily on our table. As I am a vegetarian and our 5 children are brought up on vegetarian principles, a regular dish of your excellent fruits would prove a real boon to all. Will you kindly correspond with me and c. g. state prices, including, if possible, freights, etc. I am,

Yours faith.,

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF

The Meakins' Sanitary Washboard leads all others and is so much superior that it stands alone in a class by itself. It is the grocer's best all-year-round seller, very attractive in appearance, being built of metal in one piece, which will not rust or corrode or give chance of cutting the hands on rough edges. Hygienic principles on this popular washday implement are predominant, as the construction gives no chance to collect the grime and dirt of washday.

It stands to reason that if you hand a confiding customer a trashy extract, she will buy that commodity somewhere else next time. And while she is buying that, she will most likely order something else if your competitor is wide-awake—as he most likely will be.

ALL SHIRRIFF'S EXTRACTS are best in their line, but the greatest success of all is

New Premiums for Displays Without Photograph

We find that many grocers who are willing to make displays are unable to have them photographed.

To meet their wishes we have decided to offer the following premiums for displays which are made without photograph.

These displays must be made during the month of January. They must be made of Quaker and Mother's Oats only—of one or both of these brands. Regular or family size.

These displays must consist of not less than three cases, and must be made of goods purchased during the month of January.

Applications for the premiums must be accompanied by a jobber's invoice, showing the amount and date of purchase.

The invoices must reach us not later than the end of February.

This supplementary offer does not modify conditions named relative to State Association prizes.

For displays as above specified, made in windows or stores, we offer the following cash premiums:

Every grocer complying with these conditions and sending jobber's invoice for not less than three and up to nine cases will receive our check for 50c.

Every grocer complying with these conditions and sending jobber's invoice for ten cases or more will receive our check for $1.00

(Each case must consist of 36 packages Regular Size or 20 packages Family Size.)

No grocer is entitled to more than one premium.

These premiums are less than for photographed displays, but they save you the cost and trouble of taking a photograph.

In applying for these latter premiums, the grocer must send a jobber's invoice showing the amount of purchase and must accompany same with a statement, made over his signature, on back of the jobber's invoice that the store display has been made.

Please bear in mind that the purpose of these offers is to sell Quaker Oats and Mother's Oats for you. That's why we require a quantity purchase—to insure a good display and good sale. And that is why we require that the displays be made during the best selling month, which is January.

Here are liberal premiums, open to every grocer. And every grocer, for his own sake, should get one of these premiums. It will mean, in addition, a multiplied sale on Quaker and Mother's Oats. It will make your store look like headquarters for these favorite brands.

Make a big display and make it at once, and see how your trade on these brands increases.

Address Applications for Premiums to

The handsome Christmas display in Island's grocery, Toronto, winner of first prize in The Grocer's 1911 competition.

Winners in Window Dressing Contest

The Grocer's 1911 Competition Results in Receipt of Many Excellent Displays—Circular Stair With Steps Covered With Christmas Goods Winner in Class I.—Some Photographs Do Not Show Sufficient Detail.

The accompanying panel represents the results of our 1911 Christmas window dressing competition. This contest brought out some fine displays, two of which are shown herewith. The others will be reproduced in our big Fall Number next October—a time when dealers will be looking for suggestions for the trimming of their 1912 Christmas windows.

The judges had warm praise for the Island display, winner of first prize in class 1. This is an exceedingly attractive window representing a lot of careful work. As the photograph did not show up extra well we are reproducing here a line drawing of the display as well as the original photo. It was dressed by Mr. Island's partner, C. J. Bamford

The Construction.

A circular stair is made of ten uprights placed in the centre of the window and covered with tinsel paper. The bottom row is covered with currants inlaid with the letters "Season's Greetings" made of loaf sugar.

The second row is covered with raisins, currants, sultanas and mixed peel.

THE WINNERS.

Class I.—Towns and cities over 10,000 Population.

1—C. J. Bamford (Island's Grocery), Toronto, Ont.

2—E. A. Reed (Dowling & Reed), Brandon, Man. ($3.)

3—Bruce & Sanderson, Toronto. ($2.)

Class II.—Centres under 10,000 population.

1—R. George (Hudson's Bay Co.), Kamloops, B.C. ($5.)

2—C. H. Milton (H. A. Ross), Oshawa, Ont. ($3.)

3—Millar & Wigle, Essex, Cnt. ($2.)

Judges—S. S. Moore and J. L. Maude, Honorary President and Secretary Window Trimmers' Association of Canada.

The third row is covered with table raisins and boxes of fancy biscuits.

The fourth contains different kinds of Christmas candies.

The fifth row is covered with package dates and essences.

On the sixth is shown table figs.

The seventh is covered with bottled candies and boxes of chocolates.

The eighth contains shelled nuts.

And the ninth and top row is covered with bottled olives and bottles of wine.

On the bottom is placed on each side a pyramid, one of currants and one of Sultana raisins. Around these divided by slats covered with tinsel are shown the different kinds of nuts. The back is arranged with dates, figs, oranges, grapes and grape fruit. The back of the central fixture is draped from the centre to the sides and top with twisted colored paper forming a circle.

Winner of Class II.

The display submitted from Kamloops, British Columbia, by R. George is another good window—good enough in the opinion of the judges to carry off first prize for centres under 10,000 popula-

Grocers' Expenses and Expenditures

Pertinent Inquiry for Beginning of Year—Interest on Investment—How Investment Kept Stationary—Surplus Account.

By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Editor Store Management Department, Canadian Grocer :—

Dear Sir :—Should freight and drayage be added to this overhead account ? Please answer through your paper :

Interest on investment.
Rent of building, one year.
Own salary, one year.
Extra help, salary, one year.
Extra help, salary, one year.
Extra help, salary, one year.
Depreciation on stock.
Depreciation on fixtures and tools.
Donations.
Insurance on stock and fixtures.
Light and heat.
Ice.
Paper, bags, twine, wooden dishes, etc.
Office and store stationery and supplies.
Wagon and stable.
Phone and telegrams.
Trade paper and dues.
Advertising.
Goods stolen.
Goods not charged.
Goods returned.
Bad debts.
Collection accounts and expense.
Taxes on stock and fixtures.
Miscellaneous expenses.
(All for one year.)
Dec. 30, 1911.

Respectufully,
McA—— W——.

This very full list seems to me to cover about all the needful expenses. The man who looks into his affairs as closely and analytically as this merchant does is not apt to let any important matter escape him, even if, in making up such a list, he forgets to put some of them down. Others make up a list which would nearly cover the entire stock, as, for instance, in addition to the above :

Bad weather days.
Brooms and cleaning.
Errors in figuring.
Newspapers.
Clean towels.
Lost in transit.
Wagon grease and horse shoeing.
Leakage Nails.
Messenger service.
Pencils, pens, postage, post office box.
Repairs.
Soap.
Spoilage.
Street sprinkling.
Water rent.
Market declines.
Spoiled vegetables.
Free candy and cigars.
Harness.
Fires.

But here many things are merely amplifications of such things as properly belong in classifications ; as pencils and pens in stationery. It is all right to forget nothing, but no need to list all things used. The man who charges up donations will not neglect to charge brooms, nor will he enter laundry bills for clean aprons or towels, as other than items of expense.

Expenses and Expenditure.

Further, it will not do to confuse expenditure with expense, else your classification vanishes. Freight and drayage are not expense. Nor are goods stolen, or not charged, or returned ; nor bad debts. Until yesterday, we might say, paper, bags and twine were not expense, but merchandise ; they have only just become items of expense, though they are properly expense, mostly, to-day.

In our business the word, Expense, covers properly such items as cannot be definitely located and charged against merchandise. Inasmuch as we handle such a lot of miscellaneous merchandise, of varying values, under varying conditions, we have a heavier "overhead" than a manufacturing business, for instance, or the printing business. I shall illustrate by the printer. A very great proportion of the "cost" of any job with him is what, in our case would be expense, but in his case is cost. This, because his man's time is charged for by the hour and so much time is put onto a job. Hence, while 75 per cent. of the cost may be time, it goes in as cost, not expense ; while his real overhead or charge which cannot be allotted to that work, is trifling—maybe 5 per cent.

Freight and Drayage.

With us the term, Expense, must be confined to the cost of handling merchandise ; and, while we must be exceedingly careful not to overlook anything, yet must we not charge to expense anything that can definitely be fixed on cost. Freight and drayage are such as these—items which can be put right into cost, definitely charged against the items on which such charges accrue. Tea comes under first-class rate. Let us say it costs us 40 cents per 100 lbs., and our drayage is done under contract at 50 cents per ton. The right way is to add ½ cent per pound to cover freight, drayage and shrinkage. That is safe, and our margin must be computed on top of this cost.

Goods stolen, if known as to amount, must be simply charged to Loss & Gain (or Profit & Loss, if you choose), and credited to merchandise. The same with goods not charged and lost or returned goods. But why all this trouble ? Whatever this loss, or shrinkage has really amounted to will show up in the inventory, when your net gain or loss, which we hope it will not be—is passed to the credit of your Capital or Surplus account. So, out of that list, I should take the following—if you have any doubts or objections, let us reason it out together later on :

> Goods stolen, not charged, returned and bad debts ; bad weather, errors in figuring, lost in transit (charge direct to merchandise and credit back again when and if recovered) ; leakage, spoilage, market declines, spoiled vegetables.

I do not grasp the meaning of "all for one year" or "fires." These things go on year after year ; and fires, let us hope, come so seldom that we can afford to give each one an individual accounting.

Wrapping Paper Given Away.

I said that until very recently paper, bags and twine were merchandise. This is because these were formerly sold at a profit. Paper cost from 2 to 4½ cents and, being weighed into the goods, was sold at from 2½ cents, say for salt, to $1 or more, for tea. Two factors have latterly altered this. One is the great quantity of package goods which now have to be wrapped, in which case we give the wrapping materials away. The other is the new idea of giving absolutely net weight of merchandise, which has become prevalent in many sections. If we must set our scales at 10 lbs. 2½ oz. when we weigh 10 lbs. of oatmeal, we obviously give away the bag and twine. We must see, therefore, that our margins are sufficiently wide to cover this new condition ; for it is just as obvious that we must get back the cost of everything—and then some—or we cannot live. The public must pay, but I hasten to say there is no vindictiveness in this—simply fact and condition. Further, I incline to like the net weight idea. The more we and the public understand about the details of these things, frankly discussing them, the better understanding will result.

Interest on Capital.

One point more I want to cover at this time. It is very important, so I ask your careful attention. This is the item of interest on capital. It is properly 6 per cent.; but you must avoid over-capitalization. This will sound funny to you—to think of a grocer watering his stock. Yet that is just what you may do on a scale which may be burdensome, unless you handle things right.

Let us say that you have reached a stage of development where $5,000 is enough for your capitalizing purposes; 6 per cent. thereon is $300 per year. Let us say that this year you have cleared $1,500— that your Loss & Gain account shows that much earnings. What are you going to do with that? If you charge it out of Loss & Gain and credit it to Capital, you will have $6,5000 capital. At 6 per cent. your charge for interest next year will be $390. Go on another year, making say, $1,800; add it to Capital in the same way, and your charge for interest will go up to $498. You can, of course, put a portion of that money out at interest, into bonds, mortgages, or real estate. Then you will open an Interest account, to handle what you receive; and what that surplus earns will stand against the $498 charge.

Capital Account Remains Same.

But I handle it differently. My business has gone along for the past six years without a change of Capital account. I have opened a Surplus account and net earnings go into that. That sum has been taken right out of the business and put into high-grade investments. Thus my Capital stays stationary, but the Surplus grows. This is a nice way, to my mind, to watch the growth, comparing it year by year, and obviates the passing of earnings on Surplus through the books at all.

I can see where my Capital will have to be enlarged soon, but then it will be done definitely, through incorporation or otherwise, so that my Good Will will have due credit; but then Surplus will have the future earnings just the same. Meantime, my business is kept well within bounds, so that it is always on a conservative basis.

An Extravagant Start Causes Trouble

Montreal Traveler Relates Actual Experience of Mechanic Who Opened Grocery Business With $1,000, and Spent Half on Fixtures—Other Half Went to Goods and $125 for Delivery Outfit—Careless Over Accounts Into the Bargain.

Montreal, Jan. 11 (Special).—This is the story of how a young mechanic began a grocery business handicapping himself before he had actually opened his store doors. It is from actual life and illustrates just what extravagance can do in the case of the man with small means. A traveler tells it.

"I had known him for about eight years. We will call him Brown just for convenience. He told me one day about seven months ago that he had saved $1,000, and wanted to invest it. Like many others he thought the grocery business looked easy and asked me to keep my eyes open for a good location. Remember that he was a mechanic of some kind, an electrician, if I remember rightly.

Began With $500 Stock.

"Well, I picked out a location that he approved, and of course he was very eager to put the place in order and begin taking in money. First of all I selected for him a stock that cost $500. It was well assorted, fresh and was about the right quantity for an infant business.

"Before the stock arrived we had to select fixtures and it was right here that my friend began his own undoing. I explained that we should be able to get decent shelving and other stuff of that kind for about $40. Remember I was interested in him as a friend, and I was afraid that he might get started wrongly. So I told him to look around for a second-hand line of what we wanted. We had to get a refrigerator and a scale or two.

"My advice to him all along was to go slow. He had five hundred dollars left and it was desirous that he keep as much of it as possible. I was not sure of the price we would have topay for the several lines we wanted, but I thought I had impressed upon him the necessity of being satisfied with simple fixtures until his business warranted better. He was located in quite an ordinary neighborhood and it was not necessary that he go to extremes in preparing his place for business.

Prices Caused Him no Worry.

"A few days later I called at the store and found that a refrigerator had already been purchased at $75. That was miles too much for what I had been planning, because I knew how other grocees had made their beginnings, and they had told me just about what their fixtures cost them. My friend was new to the business game, and besides I was only an adviser. To make a long story short, Brown paid $300 for the shelving and other woodwork and firmly believed he had secured a great bargain.

"I bought several cheap iron balance scales for about seven dollars, but a few days after they arrived I was surprised to find a $125 scale on the counter. It was brand new and looked the part. Brown stated that he was convinced he could make quite a saving with this machine and asked me what I thought about it. I admitted the value of the machine but expressed the opinion that there was no great hurry for these expensive goods when his future business was in doubt, and especially when he was extremely limited as to capital.

Added Delivery Outfit.

"A week or ten days later, Brown opened his store, tried to look busy and waited for the first signs of promising business. His five hundred dollars capital had been expended on the purchases of the refrigerator, scales, and shelving. He did not break any sales records during the first few weeks, but he got the idea that a horse and wagon would give him an air of prosperity that might help business indirectly. I had given up hope of doing anything with my man. He had not taken my advice, so I offered none regarding the delivery outfit. It did not surprise me several weeks later when I found that he had bought one for $125.

This must have been largely on credit.

Well, that was the beginning. Six months have passed since Brown opened his store and he is now hanging on by the merest thread. In fact it will not be long until he is all in. To relate all his mistakes would take an entire volume. Specialty men came with alluring offers and in not a few instances Brown accepted goods. With our firm it became generally known that Brown was not exactly the very best customer. He was not behind a great deal, but there were questionings as to how far he would go.

Careless About Credit.

"Did he give credit, you ask? Of course he did, and just as careless was he with this part of the game as with his first steps. In fact it was bad customers who gave him a decidedly bad set-back, as he was not in a position to meet this sort of thing.

"So you ask me why some grocers fail. This answers one kind of case, the mechanic who fleeced himself before he sold a cent's worth. Brown is not off the market yet, but from a business standpoint his malady is incurable. His business received a severe set-back right at its birth, and it did not take me long to make the guess that it would not endure much hardship."

Ontario Almost Sure of Bulk Sales Act

Member of Legislative Assembly to Bring in New Bill During Coming Session, the Principles of Which Will be Favored by Attorney-General—Purposes of Bill Defined—Now in Operation in Most Western Provinces—Prevents Fraudulent Sales.

Staff Correspondence.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—A proposed Bulk Sales Act for Ontario, was the subject of an address by W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., before the members of the Ontario section of The Canadian Credit Men's Association, at McConkey's, on the evening of Jan. 4. A couple of sessions ago a bill was introduced into the Ontario Lagislature covering terms of sale of a business, but as it was considered class legislation by some, it met an early death. However, there is now every reason to believe that when a similar bill is introduced this session—as it will be by Mr. McPherson—it will not be met with the same opposition as before.

Mr. McPherson said in part:

"Now in all matters of credit, particularly credit in personal property, as distinguished from real estate, there is a great element of chance, as I have no doubt most of you in this room have learnt. When a man comes to you and announces he is opening up business in a certain locality, after he has gone through the ordinary course of giving you information, in the last analysis, and based merely on the credit of personal estate, it must depend largely upon the character of the man with whom you are dealing. When a man parts with the possession of his goods and they go out, say to the Northwest, and while his bills are maturing, his debtor is disposing of the goods which he, as purchaser, has sold to him on credit. And after one or two renewals of the bills, it may be the purchaser finds he has not been engaged in a paying business, and he is running some risk, not only of being swamped, but of losing the money he has already invested. And he may, perhaps, have such a knowledge of the workings of the law as to enable him to put up a scheme to defeat or delay the law so as to defraud his creditors.

When Bill of Sale is Required.

When a man sells his business, if the purchaser does not go into immediate possession, then the law requires that the transaction shall be evidenced by a Bill of Sale, and in order to protect the creditors, it is necessary that the bill shall be registered with the clerk of the County Court. If, however, there is an immediate change of possession, so that the buyer goes into immediate possession of the goods, the Bill of Sale is not required.

It may be that a scheme is put up by the debtor intending to defraud the creditor, and there may be a collusive arrangement between the seller and the buyer, who in the majority of instances where that kind of thing has taken place in Ontario are near relatives; the seller fortifies himself with a certain amount of cash. He turns the business over to the buyer, gives him a receipt, vanishes across the line, and by the time the creditor hears of the transaction, a new man is in occupation who acknowledges no liability to him, and the debtor far away with the money in his pocket.

The Remedy Under the Law.

Assuming that to be the case, your remedy practically is gone. There has been a valid transfer of the goods, which, as long as they were in the possession of the debtor, would have been a security to you as seller; but when the ownership of the goods has been changed so, there has been a good and legal transfer, and you, having left your goods in the possession of the debtor on his good faith, are without remedy under the law as it exists. When he vanishes your security has gone too.

The Law in Western Canada.

Now that phase of the law has been taken advantage of on many occasions. I dare say there is not a man in the room who has not had experience of it in his own business, or has heard from his associates of cases where it has occurred. It has been for some time an object with the mercantile fraternity to stop a gap of this kind. Some of the western provinces devised the idea of having a law passed by the legislatures which they call the Bulk Sales Act, and which, in short, was a provision by law whereby a man intending to sell out his stock of goods to another man, there was an obligation placed by law upon the intending purchaser to inquire of the intending seller as to what his accounts where in respect of the goods. And the law requires a certain percentage of the creditors of the intending seller to assent to the transfer, giving them the opportunity of coming into touch with the intending purchaser, so that he would be notified of what the true state of affairs was.

Now, there are Bulk Sales Acts in operation in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, but so far, nothing of the kind has been in operation here. The Legislature of Ontario was approached and the subject was mooted to the government of the day, to see whether they would consent to making it applicable to Ontario. A bill was introduced two sessions ago by Dr. Jessop, of Welland, but it did not proceed very far. The government were afraid that, perhaps, the effect of the law would be that some people, honest in their intentions and having sold their businesses, their sale through some inadvertent noncompliance with the law might be considered null and void, and they still be held liable for the goods sold.

Why Former Bill Was Turned Down.

Last session, R. S. Gourlay, President of the Board of Trade, and Hugh Blain, with myself and other members of the Board of Trade, met at the Legislative Assembly, and requested an interview with the Attorney-General, to see whether he, representing the government as its legal adviser, could not be prevailed upon to allow a similar bill to become law in Ontario. We had a very interesting discussion, the various phases of the question were gone into thoroughly, but, although the Attorney-General favored a considerable number of the provisions of the bill, some of them did not meet with his approval, and he felt disinclined to advise the Premier to consent to its becoming law, and asked that it might remain over for another session so that he might have the opportunity to inquire of the other provinces how the Act was working out in actual practice.

Since that time, the usefulness and necessity of this Act have been demonstrated, and I have very much pleasure indeed in being able to inform you and the members of your Association that, at an interview I had with the Attorney-General the other day, he said I would be quite at liberty to introduce the Bill this year, and that it would receive favorable consideration from the government."

Mr. McPherson read the provisions of the last bill, pointing out that while the principles of the new one would be similar, some of the clauses needed attention, and invited suggestions from the members of the Credit Men's Association.

MAIL SERVICE TO YUKON.

John Zarrarelli, a Grocer reader in Dawson, Yukon Territory, writes pointing out the inefficient mail service in the winter months from the rest of Canada into the Yukon. Mr. Zarrarelli states that Dr. Alfred Thompson, M.P., for the Yukon, will ask parliament to remedy this matter and he requests aid from M.P.'s south and east of the Yukon. He intimates that all kinds of mail matter is held up until the opening of navigation in June which, of course, is a serious handicap to business.

The Management of a Retail Business

No. 3—STOCKTAKING—Continued

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

Our article of last week mostly concerned the question of stock-taking, with special reference to the valuation of goods, their depreciation, and other features, methods, and principles that should govern every serious attempt to ascertain the money worth of a business at a given time. The stock sheets, however, form only a part of the inventory. In reality, although not in name, the whole balance sheet is an inventory and consequently the other items, assets as well as liabilities, should be listed and valued.

Inasmuch as merchandise and fixtures, with which we have already dealt, belong to the asset side of the balance sheet, we had better adhere to this side for the present and first of all look into the question of accounts receivable. We will not discuss now the merits or demerits of cash or credit systems. There is much to be said on this point, and it will be reserved for an article later on in the series.

Charge Accounts Correctly.

The first thing that should be made sure is that all accounts have been properly charged, or credited as the case may be, up to the time of stock-taking. Sales made after the stock has been taken should not be posted to accounts receivable until after the balances have been struck, but if they are, care must be taken to deduct the cost value of such sales from the stock sheets, otherwise a false inflation would arise.

There are few merchants doing a credit business that do not sometimes make an error in extending credit, and when making the list of accounts, taken one by one from the ledger, the merchant should weigh the collectible value of each, taking all circumstances into consideration.

It is better to clasify them under three of four heads, using paper ruled with sufficient money columns for the purpose. By entering the ledger folio against each name considerable time may be saved from time to time in making reference to the ledger from the sheets. If three classifications are used they might be termed "good," "doubtful" and "bad," and if four classes are adopted, the "good" may usefully be divided into "prompt pay" and "slow pay."

Do Not Overestimate.

Very often the dealer will be in a quandry as to what class a certain account should be assigned. A safe rule to follow in this event is to place it in the lower class, that is, if he is debating in his mind whether it should be good or doubtful, make it the latter. If doubtful or bad, make it bad. The mere fact that the merchant himself admits of doubt is proof enough that this rule should be followed. The object, of course, is to get at the true worth as nearly as possible, and it is better to err on the side of conservatism rather than the reverse.

Having completed the list, and ascertained the total of each classification, the question arises as to what value should be placed upon them. The list of good accounts should, of course, go in at par. Doubtful accounts should be subject to a depreciated valuation determined by the merchant who knows, or should know, all the circumstances in connection with each account so listed. As for bad accounts, they should have no cash value in the balance sheet. Bills receivable, of course, should be subjected to the same mode of treatment as accounts receivable.

Serve as Good Reminder.

Besides serving the purposes of the merchant in preparing his balance sheet, these lists of accounts, made in duplicate, if necessary, can be made to serve as a tickler or reminder in the important work of collecting accounts. The doubtful list should call for immediate attention and efforts made forthwith by judicious means to turn the accounts into cash. The bad accounts should not be entirely discarded until every resource has been exhausted.

48,000 CASES TOMATOES.

The copy for the page advertisement of Hudon, Hebert & Cie., Ltd., in last week's Grocer announced that while receiving only 40 per cent. of their order of canned tomatoes, the firm had sold 48,000 cases, and had delivered the full amount of 48,000 cases. By a typographical error, one of the ciphers was omitted from these numbers, giving a totally inadequate idea of the immense volume of canned tomatoes handled by Hudon, Hebert & Cie. That this was a typographical error was doubtless recognized by most of our readers, who know the extent of this firm's business, but to prevent any possibility of a wrong idea in the minds of any of our readers this correction is made.

MONEY IN SLOT MACHINES.

That there is money in the penny, nickel and dime slot machines is evidenced by the expansion of trade made by a large United States concern. Although only organized a little over a year ago one company's earnings up to Nov. 1, 1911, were at rate of 6 per cent. a year on its capital stock. This one operated penny machines. A company operating five and ten cent machines is planning to acquire a number of corporations for which it will pay almost $65,000,000.

REFUSED TO EXTEND CREDIT BEYOND A WEEK

Woman Customer First Paid Cash, Then Asked for Week and Finally for Month—Latter Request Refused and Customer Still Stayed.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—(Special)—Bruce & Sanderson, Parliament St. grocers, believe it is better to refuse credit where there is ever so small a chance of loss involved, than to sell on account even if it means the gain of a new customer.

Some time ago, to exemplify their methods, a woman began dealing with them. For quite a while she paid cash for everything. Then she asked for credit as she didn't happen to have the money. This, however, was refused until she gave her promise to settle up at the end of each week. This, Mr. Bruce, emphasised particularly.

All went well for some time. Next she came with the story that her husband was only paid once a month and that sometimes it was very inconvenient to settle more frequently. She could get credit at other stores but she liked Bruce & Sanderson's, liked the service and the goods and wanted to continue to deal there.

But this story didn't work. Mr. Bruce pointed out that her trade was appreciated but that he couldn't possibly extend credit any longer than the week. To keep up their business and make it a convenience to the public they must receive money for their goods. He would be sorry to lose her account but under the circumstances couldn't see his way clear to grant the request.

The woman is still dealing at Bruce & Sanderson's and paying her account weekly.

WE TURN OVER A NEW LEAF.

The man in business who merely holds his own in this country is going behind, because the country as a whole is going ahead. Methods, stocks, store fronts, fixtures, that were good enough twenty years ago have outlived their usefulness, just because we are living in a progressive age. There is nothing so deadening as doing the same thing over and over again. No business is so dead as that where methods are justified merely because things have always been done in that way.

The value of The Canadian Grocer lies in the fact, that it is a continual protest against a man getting into a rut. It tells the grocer in Moncton what his brother is doing in Kamloops. It gives a man in Saltcoats an idea about window dressing caught from a photograph taken in Halifax. The Canadian Grocer is the purveyor of news about groceries and the sale of groceries. Its markets are news, its editorials are news, and most of all the big news feature of The Canadian Grocer is its advertising section. Here, over two hundred writers, specialists in their several lines, are telling our readers each week, something about the line in which they are most expert. Sometimes one of them may nod and forget that his business is to give the news, but there never was a time when The Canadian Grocer's advertisements were more what advertisements should be, bright, meaty tales, full of suggestions that give the grocer or his clerk ideas, talking points, suggestions for selling beyond what is merely asked for, beyond merely supplying the demand.

Our New Year's resolution was that we would keep that news idea constantly before us, before our reporters, our advertisers and our readers. Then we began to look ourselves over. After all, were we just as newsy as we might be? We had been improving our paper typographically, strengthening our editorial and reportorial staff, making it more practical and bringing it closer to the retailer, but in spite of this had we been getting into a rut in places, doing things merely because we had got into the habit of doing them?

Guilty.

We had to plead guilty. While every grocer in Canada had been improving his store front, while plate glass windows, brass railings and electric lights had become common during recent years, we had been running along with our old green cover, which could not take a half-tone cut and which made a special color advertisement look like a faded circus poster. Why had we continued it? Habit. And we are cutting out bad habbits. With the first of February, the old green cover goes. In its place we will use a heavy coated white paper that will take the best half-tone cut made, and bring out a design in special colors with all the brilliance of the spectrum.

One thing about making a good change in that one good change suggests another. If the news value of a good advertisement is as important as that of the market report, why shouldn't we have a new news-item advertisement on the front cover of The Grocer, every issue. It would attract more attention, more permanent attention, it would emphasize the news value of all our advertising, and so strengthen every other advertisement in the paper. Besides, it would give a chance for nearly fifty different advertisers to take part in writing our front page news advertisement, instead of two as heretofore. This should result in a greater variety of news, wider extent of interest, as well as a greater opportunity for all our friends to use this space occasionally.

So much for our front door. Our interior arrangement and fixtures then came in for examination. While our subscribers had been installing silent salesmen, counter bins and modern shelving, making a place for everything, and putting everything in its place, we had been so absorbed in improving the quality of the matter handled in our provision, cereal and other departments that we had neglected to do for ourselves what we have been all along advising our readers to do—keep our floor space clear—and have been mixing up our advertising and reading matter in our special departments, like the interior arrangement of the store of twenty years ago.

Never again.

Here's where we start improvement number two. When the grocer is reading advertisements in this paper he is interested in advertisements, and is not particularly anxious at that moment to know what the learned editor has to say. The time is past when you have to trap Canadian Grocer subscribers into reading the advertisements in this paper by placing them next to reading matter. Advertisements are news, and we are going to classify our news, the advertising news in the front and back and the staff news in the centre of the paper. Hereafter, the make-up of The Grocer will be a model for an up-to-date grocery store-plan. We will have a place for everything and everything in its place.

Our good resolutions take effect the first of February. We only wonder now why we never made them before. Keep your eye on The Grocer this year, its reforms are just beginning. There are more to follow.

CANADA'S GREAT FISHERIES.

Nova Scotia is the premier fish producing province of the Dominion During season of 1910-11 the fisheries of this province produced a value amounting to $10,119,243, the largest yet reached. This is an increase of $2,038,131 above the previous year, according to the government's blue book.

Salmon, lobsters, haddock, pollock, hack and halibut all showed increases while herring and mackerel went back a little. The total increase is largely accounted for by the big catch of the Lunenburg deep-seas fleet and the high prices paid for dried fish throughout the year. Majority of the other provinces showed slight declines.

but on the whole the value is $336,264 above previous year.

The entire capital invested in Canadian fisheries during the year was $19,019,870. The total value of fish marketed amounted to the huge sum of $29,965,433, constituting a record.

British Columbia was a close second to Nova Scotia, with $9,163,235 worth.

No less than 93,588 persons were engaged in marketing the fish in Canada. It is a fact that Canada possesses the most extensive fisheries in the world.

LESS OLIVE OIL ADULTERATION.

A bulletin just issued on olive oil by the Dominion Inland Revenue Department shows that of 152 samples of oil from various parts of the Dominion examined, 139 were found to be genuine and 13 adulterated. It is gratifying to note that the percentage of adulteration is greatly reduced since 1889, when the first inspection was made. Out of 75 samples examined that year, 40 only were genuine, 30 adulterated and 5 doubtful.

The adulteration consists in every case of an admixture of cottonseed oil without declaration of this fact. In some cases, this article has been sold in good faith, believed to be genuine olive oil. While this fact seems to exculpate the immediate vendors from any charge of intent to defraud, the samples must still, under the Act, be described as adulterated.

WESTERN AGRICULTURAL SITUATION.

With a temperature ranging from 20 to 40 degrees below zero during the last week, threshing has of necessity been stopped, but the grain continues to pour out of interior elevators to such an extent that the capacity at the head of the lakes for storage is deficient and arrangements are being completed for storing grain in bond at Duluth.

The estimated returns from the farms, including cereals, live stock, hay and root crops, Manitoba poultry and dairy products, of the three central provinces for 1911 is $101,620,716.20 as compared with $80,202,947.65 for 1910. In spite of the late threshing a larger percentage of wheat has been accounted for than ever before at this season of the year, while new records have been made in the matter of the forward movement from interior elevators.

In December, the enormous total of 18,000,000 bushels were inspected at Winnipeg, the total number inspected to December 31 being 79,914,700 bushels. It is also estimated that within the neighborhood of 50,000,000 bushels of wheat iis till in the farmers' hands, if the estimate of 146,000,000 made in September is correct.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING.

In the recent "High Cost of Living" newspaper talk much was said about the "middleman's" margin of profit being excessive, which was unfair and unfounded.

It has been calculated that but 20 per cent. of the income of the people of the United States (and the same, no doubt, applied to Canada) is spent for food. Food, too, is a necessity to life.

J. C. Reid, president of the National Oats Co., pertinently asks: "How then with 80 per cent. for other things, Dr. Wiley, Secretary Wilson, or any one else could charge that the retail grocer is responsible for the high cost of living, we are at a loss to understand.

"It costs the average retail grocer from 15 per cent. to 17½ per cent. to operate his business. His average gross profit is but 20 per cent; he makes a bare 2½ per cent. on his sales. The sales of the average grocery store would approximate $20,000 a year, or a profit of $500. Grossly exorbitant, is it not? And when one thinks of the wastefulness of these political officeholders, we are so filled with disgust that it approaches nausea when we contemplate the cheap and petty reasons for their making the public statements that they do."

Mr. Reid's contention is quite fair. Newspapers and politicians in their zeal to cater to the masses without using their brains, make most unjust statements about the grocer and his margin of profit. Let them stop to consider that not more than 20 per cent. of the peoples' income goes to food—an absolute necessity—that it costs grocers from 14 to 17 per cent. to do business, and they will likely discover other reasons for the high cost of living.

SEASON OF FROSTS HERE.

The season is here when the grocer must guard against damage to his goods by frost. This is one case in which a stitch in time is not only best but necessary. The customer who receives an article which has been touched by frost is by no means satisfied. You will probably hear about it. Perhaps it may mean the loss of a customer. Then there is often direct loss by goods totally destroyed or the flavor so impaired that they are rendered unsalable.

Oranges, bananas, grapes and other fruits grown in a warm climate are very sensitive to frost. It does not take a low temperature to affect potatoes, carrots, apples, cabbage and similar lines, which lose their flavor by being frozen, and which all spoil when frost touched.

Canned goods should be stored in a safe place. Oysters, while they should be kept cool, should not be allowed to freeze. The same care should be taken with bottled goods, barrel vinegar, cheese, etc. It will pay the grocer to keep on the watch in order to prevent freezing.

FEATURE CEREALS NOW.

When the holiday window is removed and the grocer drops back to his ordinary seasonable business, it might not be amiss to make a beginning with a cereal display.

In this, rolled oats will have to be given a position of importance, because of the seasonable sales that are being made and that can be much increased. A Montreal grocer opened his daily advertising by giving a prominent position to cereals, including a little reference to the fact that this is quite seasonable. It is a contrast to the goods that have been shown during the past three or four weeks, and is a plain food in comparison with what has been sold of late.

This will be catching the trade in about the middle of the season and should help to maintain and increase the interest in rolled oats and the other seasonable cereals.

Figures showing extent of building in Canada during first eleven months of 1911 are very encouraging. In 27 of the largest cities the increase amounts to 28.1 per cent. over corresponding period of the preceding year. This percentage is another good indication of the prosperity of the country.

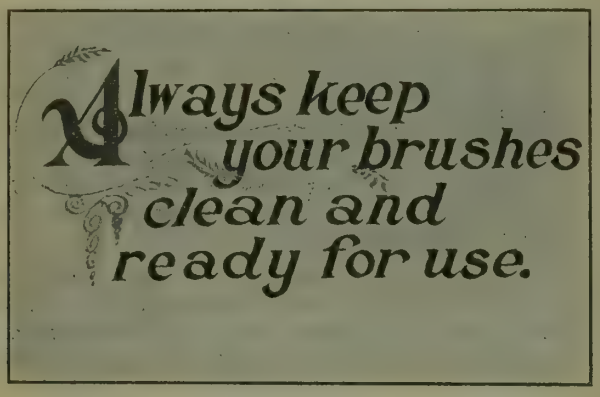
Lesson 9--Short Course in Card Writing

The Edwards Short-cut System—Showing Lower Case Letters of the Speedy Slant Roman Alphabet—Simple Method of Illuminating—Mixing Colors.

By J. C. Edwards. Copyright, Canada, 1911.

The use of capitals exclusively in a card is very undesirable as they are not so easily read as the lower case or small letters, with a capital either beginning the sentence or beginning each word. The capital and lower case letters are more quickly made; in fact, a card-writer can execute the small letters in less than half the time that it takes to make capitals.

Note each letter and its various strokes in detail and practice each many times, always being careful to get the correct slant to every letter. The more graceful and easy swing you get into this or any style of letter the more successful you are in reaching the goal every card-writer aims for.



Ornamented card, showing application of the speedy slant Roman.

The object in introducing this style of letter is to acquaint the student with the details which go to create speed rather than retard it. Compare this style with that taught in lessons No. 6 and 7—Brush Stroke Roman. Note the absence of spurs wherever it is possible to do away with them. This point alone is a recommendation for the slant Roman lower case letter. For instance, note the first stroke in letter "A." It is practically a cyma, lacking as it does the spur that is used in the plain brush stroke upright style. Note also the second stroke of the same letter; the second stroke in "f," the second in "j," the second and third in "s" and so on, and you will see that one single stroke of the brush replaces the rather difficult spur of the upright style as shown previously. The "c" also demonstrates this point as also does the first stroke of the "b," the third of "d," second of "h," third of "m," second of "n," etc.

Examine every letter and try them with your brush flattened out nicely—rubbed out on your palette or card board used for that purpose.

Draw the lines as referred to in lesson 8 as guide lines to get the right angle. You are sure to have difficulty at first, but perserverance will master it. Don't get discouraged if you fail first time; even the second or third time. Try again and you will succeed.

Always hold the brush at the same angle—square with the top of the card; don't change it or twist the fingers but make the letter with clean brush strokes. There are only two or three cases where the brush is held at commencement at a different angle and those are to form cymes, as stroke three in the second form of "g," stroke one in the "s" and two in the "z."

The strokes such as two in "j" and three in "g" may be made either with the brush held straight or at a slight angle (inclining to the left). This is left to the discretion of the writer.

Another letter which can be made in two different ways is the "p." It can be made as shown in the plate with the curved stroke all in one or it may be made as the "b" with two strokes. This also is left to the judgment of the student.

The card illustrating the use of this style of lettering is quite a plain and decorated specimen, but serves to demonstrate this lettering put in card form.

It also shows a very simple mode of illuminating—a few strokes of the brush wet with a grey paint or some mild shade or tint.

Do not allow your lettering to creep too far to the one side or the other. Be careful also to get your letters spaced evenly or rather to make them look even. Two o's coming together will bear less space between them; two capital "L's" coming together in the same word can be shortened so as to not make them look uneven, the same applies to capital T's.

The scroll which is shown at the bottom of the plate is very simply made with one stroke of the brush. Try it. Note the arrows.

Tints are made from a foundation of white letterine with a slight bit of any color added; a little at a time is added until the desired shade is acquired.

Get a little dry blue at the hardware store or aniline dye at the drug store, and pour out a small quantity of white on a piece of glass to which add a very small portion of blue. Mix thoroughly and work up until the right shade, which should be mild, is arrived at.

Shade the letter as shown in this lesson or use the left hand shade, as shown previously, which is the most simple and most easily made. Note the round cut showing outfit.

WINNER IN AD. WRITING CONTEST

The winner in The Grocer 1911 Christmas ad-writing contest was the W. H. Stone Co., Winnipeg. The writer of the ad. was A. E. White, the manager, and for general appearance, neatness, type, display, setting and wording, is a splendid sample. The only criticism was against the introduction. The two next best advertisements in the opinion of the judges were those of Forsyth, Jr., Dartmouth, N.S., and J. D. Taylor, Sudbury, Ont. These, they state, while the wording was generally good, did not have the best appearance, the fault being mostly attributable to the composition. The Grocer has held the reproduction of these Christmas advertisements over until our fall number in October when they will be particularly beneficial for seasonable inspection.

The province where the Spanish onion is grown most abundantly is Valencia, Spain, in which 9,266 acres are planted with this vegetable, and the annual crop amounts to about 3,200,000 bushels. The province of Zamora leads in the output of garlic, the last crop amounting to 255,397 bushels.

Montreal, Jan. 11.—The new year has begun auspiciously, but not particularly so. Travelers should all be on the road again with beginning of next week and usual business of this season should be felt. Some claim that business is brisk after first of year but that it begins to fall off again after first three or four weeks, has a short period of near dullness and then wakes up to boom preparations for Easter and the spring trade. This is only one estimation of how the business season opens and others may not agree with it. At present there is an encouraging amount of business passing, but it must be remembered that the last three months of the year were exceptionally good and it can hardly be expected that all supplies then bought up are yet exhausted. When they begin to approach the point of exhaustion there will be a strong movement to renew supplies.

It may be said that market is characterized by holding of prices on lines that were high before the holidays. Dried fruits and nuts with but few exceptions are firm and, as will appear in another column, prunes are giving signals already of further advances in the near future. And this is not the only instance in these markets which deserve the attention of that portion of the trade who as they claim like to buy right.

Alimentary pastes, French and Canadian, show an advance of one-half cent. a pound and arrowroot is also higher. The latter is quoted now as follows: 7 lb. tins, 14 cents a pound; one pound tins, 18 cents a pound. The markets have begun the new year satisfactorily thus far.

SUGAR.—Reference was made in last week's issue of the decline on the 4th at 11 a.m. At the new prices the market has been fairly steady with a moderate demand. The unsettled condition of the market does not invite confidence and purchasers are buying for present demands only.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—Molasses are in limited supply locally and are therefore held firmly. The price should hold steadily under present conditions for some time. Syrups are in good demand and retailers should remember that a particular seasonable trade can be done in that line now.

DRIED FRUITS.—An item of importance to the trade this week is an announcement that the price of prunes to the jobbing trade will be or is practically advanced one cent a pound over the last price at which jobbers made their purchases. It will be remembered that early last summer prunes in the smaller sizes went up to 18 cents and even higher. It is significant that jobbers have instructed their travelers to impress upon the retail trade the desirability of covering their wants or rather anticipating their future requirements for the year and of purchasing while prices are at present level. Jobbers have remarked that their prices have not yet been advanced, but that they will be marked up as soon as a revival of demand is felt. Trade in this line is quiet at present, but as supplies among the retailers become exhausted there is bound to be a new interest. One jobber stated he expected to see prices for prunes go as high as they did a year ago. In the meantime retailers might do well to consider their position and to carefully review the market and its conditions. Sultana and Valencia raisins are quite firm and prices are unyielding. Owing to the supply being none too free the market is fully expected to hold steady and strong. Dried fruits so far have lost nothing as the result of passing of holiday trade. They should hold firmly.

NUTS.—There is an ordinary trade in nuts just now. It is as good as might be expected at this season. Bordeaux halves, walnuts are firmer and are likely to reach a higher price. Brazils are quoted as high as 25 cents, and prices all down the list are steady and firm. The holiday trade has passed but there has been no downward tendency in the market.

Present demand is ordinary. Prices are firm. The trade seems to be temporarily supplied according to reports from jobbers.

TORONTO.—Salmon here and elsewhere holds firmly at the high price. Deliveries which were late in being made this year are practically all completed. The statistics of the pack of British Columbia salmon for 1911 show that there was put up last season a total of 948,965 cases. In 1910 the pack was 762,201 cases, and in 1909 it was 967,920 cases. The pack of sockeyes was smaller than the year before, being only 383,509 cases. Red springs amounted to 38,751 cases, white springs 9,705 cases, chums 91,951 cases, pinks 305,247, while there was a pack of 119,802 cases of cohoes. In 1905, a "fat" year the total pack was 1,167,460 cases.

The amount of tomatoes imported from the United States this year has been considerable. Prices on this line across the border continue on the upward trend.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Evaporated Apples.—Slightly firmer.

Bosnia Prunes.—Quoted at 8 to 8½c.

Cloves.—Easier tendency.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—The year for the grocery trade has opened up quite well. True, trade during the past two weeks has not been brisk, but this is only natural after heavy purchasing of previous two months, while fact that retailers are busy with their annual inventory has to be taken into consideration. In spite of this, some retailers contend that trade has a better swing than is usual at this time. At any rate, no complaints are being made by wholesalers, for memories of the past year are indeed pleasant, and next twelve months are looked forward to with confidence. Travelers are again back on the road and return to steadiness is expected in business shortly.

SUGAR.—Sugar declined 10 cents on Thursday last as announced briefly in our issue of last week. The main features of the market are practically same as previous to decline. How low the market will go is a difficult question until the situation becomes more clearly defined. There are many guesses Time alone will tell how near they are to mark. Meanwhile operations in anticipation of some further easing are on hand-to-mouth basis. Consumption seems fair for the season.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—The year has opened up well in syrups, and molasses is also doing fairly well. With the retailer having more time to devote to these lines and the weather lending favorable assistance trade is brisk. The retailer would do well to take advantage of the favorable conditions to promote sales.

The high price of sugar naturally gives molasses producers a reason for asking high prices for their product, but, with sugar easing, they may be induced to modify their ideas on new crop as expressed some time ago.

DRIED FRUITS.—Interest does not seem to be revived in dried fruits as yet. From now on during the coming months retailers should find a steady demand for these lines, and now, with the holidays past, it is well that the dealer commence to give prominence to the staple lines. Prunes stand up well under general market conditions, although fair stocks are held here. The 1911 California prune crop was estimated at close on 175,000,000 lbs. as compared with not much over 75,000,000 lbs. the previous year, but the bare markets this year combined with big demand from foreign countries stiffened prices to their present level. Bosnia prunes are quoted at 8 to 8½ cents.

Apricots and peaches on account of high prices have not met with their usual demand. Figs and dates are selling fairly freely, the latter at slightly easier prices.

As noted last week, evaporated apples under more enquiry from foreign sources are slightly firmer.

TEA.—Although there is no real quotable change, there has been easiness in some quarters, giving relief to the late tense situation. November shipments from Ceylon to the United Kingdom exceeded all anticipations, nearly doubling those of last year. It is estimated that December shipments will take ten and a half millions compared with last December's eight and a half, making, if this estimate is correct, the total shipments to the United Kingdom for 1911 six millions ahead of the previous year's total.

"All markets for common tea," says a report from Colombo, Ceylon, "have declined somewhat and there is a probability of a still easier market for lower grades. With regard to the better grades, prices are firm and likely to remain so, for the increased supply is nearly all in inferior teas. Good to fine Ceylon teas are still insufficient to meet all demands. The somewhat larger supplies are by no means sufficient to cause a serious slump. Neither the Ceylon nor Indian crop is in excess of what will be required."

COFFEE.—What effect has the high prices had on the consumption of coffee? In the United States while some say it has decreased, others contend that it has not. These are opinions of individual coffee dealers who have different methods apparently of arriving at conclusions.

On the local market, some dealers report that sales are keeping at a good level. Others believe that the high price will no doubt reduce consumption. It is pointed out by one dealer that while it is only natural for total coffee consumption in Canada to increase, the consumption per capita on the other hand might show a falling off.

SPICES.—Since the close of the Christmas demand, spices have been a little quiet. Indications are for cream tartar to hold fairly stiff.

Winnipeg, Jan. 11.—Severe cold which has been existing for last week has to a considerable extent handicapped trade, but wholesalers are nevertheless enthusiastic, and all predict increased trade between now and spring. Tone of market has been strong and many advances will be noticed in different lines. Travelers are now returning to their routes so that increased orders are looked for shortly. Prunes, Valencia raisins and matches have been in the greatest demand during the week.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Jan. 11.—The only feature of interest on local market in last week has been ten cent decline in sugar per hundred. Indications are that further drop will take place, according to local dealers who follow the market closely. At any rate, it won't be any higher. Aside from this, market has been quiet, but trade has been steady. With most dealers the past week has been used for stock-taking. Travelers are again on road after holiday lull, and good orders are being received. The making of ice on the river, coupled with liberal snowfall, enabled many country customers to reach city during week.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Jan. 11.—The feature of past ten days was drop in price of sugar. On Monday of last week local refineries made cut of ten cents per hundred pounds, and again on Thursday another reduction of ten cents on all grades. Just now the retail demand for sugar is rather light.

Wholesale dealers report that business during the past year was good, despite high prices asked for many lines. Many of the jobbers found on balancing books that business was considerably better than previous year. Just now trade is a little quiet, which is always to be expected after the holiday rush. Then, again, season has been open, and the country roads have been bad for travel.

Dealers in confectionery report sales of chocolates at Christmas and New Year's were heavier than ever before. They also note that there was a marked falling off in sales of the cheaper grades of confectionery.

Sales of flour are now comparatively light. Feeds are in good demand, and the prices are firm.

Potato markets continue quite active. There appears to be good demand for all stock offering, and while prices at present are unchanged, dealers say that thay will go higher.

There is an abundance of apples, principally Bishop pippins, on local market. Little hard winter fruit is offering. According to late cables, there is a falling off in the demand in the British market, and prices are easier.

Seattle jobbers have decided to no longer accept "gross weight as net weight" on walnuts. In other words they will resist the growers' system of making them pay for sacks just as though the sacks were walnuts.

DEALER GETS BEHIND MINERAL WATER.

Montreal, Jan. 11.—A few days ago one of the leading grocers received an order for a new mineral water that had been recently placed upon the market. He did not have it in stock as it had only been brought out recently, so he told the customer he would do his best to fill the order. This had been the only demand and the grocer immediately secured a supply determining to sell it to other customers without being asked for it.

The progressiveness thus displayed is found in many grocery stores and the trade, as a whole, are gradually working toward that end.

WINNERS IN WINDOW DRESSING CONTEST.

tion. One of the chief features in this display is the symmetry with which it has been constructed. Kamloops has a population of about 4,500.

The top portion of the window includes dried and canned fruits and Christmas crackers. Next comes canned and bottled fruits; then is a row of evaporated fruits and below are raisins, currants and marmalade. Below that again are peels and jams and evaporated fruit. The bottom row consists of biscuits, plum puddings, figs and raisins.

The order shown in the display is much to be commended and along with the Island window, presents a good lesson in symmetry.

Both Dowling & Reed and Bruce & Sanderson have excellent displays and as pointed out above these will be reproduced in the fall. Arthur Harp, of the Cash Bargain Grocery, Brantford, Ont., deserves honorable mention.

In class II, the winners of second and third prizes, C. H. Milton, of Oshawa, and Millar & Wigle, Essex, had attractive displays with possibly too much in the former and not sufficient Christmas goods in the latter. Other good windows in this class were sent in by Donald R. McInnes, Gravenhurst, Geo M. Sawyer, Leamington, Allan H. Clark with Charlton Bros., Lakefield and E. Hutton, Earlscourt. Majority of these photographs were, however, not good. They did not show up the detail of the window. Some were spoiled by reflections. One dealer sent two windows without either name or place of business marked on them.

Every dealer and clerk should keep a file for window displays shown in The Grocer. These at some time or another will be found useful.

Some Business Changes and New Stores Opened—Hamilton Association Holds Annual Meeting—Presentation by Employes —New Biscuit Factory for B. C.—Quebec Clerks' Demands—Chatham Grocer Becomes Mayor.

Wm. G. Coles, grocery broker, London, Ont., was elected an alderman of that city.

Robt. Wallace, president of the Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flakes, London, Ont., is leaving this week on a three months' trip to Bermuda.

F. E. Silcox, London, Ont., has disposed of his business to Paul Ward. He purchased it about a year ago from F. Paul & Son.

Mrs. M. McCarrell has opened a grocery store in Peterborough, Ont., at corner of McDonel and Aylmer Sts.

The early closing by-law in Caledonia, Ontario, which was questioned by one of the merchants of that village has been upheld as valid by Justice Riddell. The grounds on which the motion was based were the alleged insufficiency of the petitions presented to the council for its passage. His lordship finds, however, that the by-law was one which the council could pass without any petitions, and he expresses the opinion that the power given by the statute is not in any way diminished by the fact that wholly unnecessary petitions were filed.

Popham Bros. Manufacturing Co., Victoria, B.C., are contemplating building a biscuit and confectionery factory.

A delegation of the Retail Clerks' Association of Quebec City, recently waited on Sir Lomer Gouin, to ask that a charter with special privileges be conferred to the association by the local government. The delegation was received by Sir Lomer Gouin, Hon. Mr. Decarie and Hon. Mr. Taschereau, and their demands were promised serious consideration. The principal demands of the delegates are: That the retail merchants shall not keep their stores opened more than sixty hours a week; that the work women and children in such stores be regulated by the manufacturers' law of this province; that all the stores should be inspected by Government officials at least once a year to see if the merchants keep them in sanitary condition; that the Retail Clerks' Association be provided with a provincial charter.

A number of grocers in the southwestern portion of Peterborough, Ont., have decided to close their stores at 9 p.m. each evening. They include Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Dunsford, and Messrs. Parks, Goheen, Wotten, Lillico and Bradshaw.

The Retail Grocers' Association, of Hamilton, Ont., went on record at their annual meeting last week as being in favor of a provincial organization of retail grocers. The Hamilton grocers decided to issue challenges to the Brantford and Toronto associations to meet them in progressive euchre, a schedule to be arranged for the winter months. New officers for 1912 are:

MAYOR WILLIAM ANDERSON
Chatham, Ont.

Though he barely looks that age, Mayor William Anderson, of Chatham, has been associated with the grocery business for all of thirty-six years. He commenced in his native Scotland at the age of 15. Born in Stirling, he spent most of his time in Glasgow prior to coming to Canada. He was for three years a traveler for McLaren's, Limited, of Hamilton, then joined the staff of H. Malcolmson's grocery at Chatham. After ten years spent with that firm, he set up in business for himself, purchasing the grocery formerly conducted by J. E. Johnston.

Mr. Anderson is a strong supporter of trade organization, and was a mainstay of the Chatham branch of the Retail Merchants' Association. He was president of that organization during one of the most successful years of its existence, and had a large part in instituting the annual merchants' picnic.

Mr Anderson served four years on the Chatham Public Library Board. Thence he graduated to the city council, to which he was thrice elected with a handsome vote, serving for two years as chairman of the civic property committee. This year his fellow-citizens elected him to the mayor's chair by 174 majority over a strong opponent.

G. A. Goheen, a Peterborough, Ont., grocer, was presented with a gold-headed umbrella by his employes.

W. A. Black, general manager of The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., is in the West looking for location for the new 3,000 barrel mill the company has decided to erect.

The Gipe-Hazard Store Service Co., Toronto, has taken over the business of the Gipe Carrier Co. and also that of the Hazard Store Service Co. E. C. Gipe is the general manager.

Moir's Limited, confectionery manufacturers, Halifax, N.S., are erecting a new building. It will be eight stories high on one side, and six on the other. At present about 400 are employed in this factory, but on the completion of the new building, James Moir, the president, expects it will be necessary to add 300 more employes.

W. H. Wilson, sales manager, MacLaren Imperial Cheese Co., has left for the Old Country to discuss with manufacturers which this firm represent in Canada, ways and means advantageous to the wholesaler, retailer and consumer, in the distribution and sale of their each individual product. It is to be hoped he will return with much news and valuable information for the trade.

MAINTAINING THE PRICE.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—The maintenance of selling prices to give a fair profit is something that should have the consideration of every dealer. It is well known to careful merchants that some of their competitors either do not get their just profits or they are ignorant of the cost of goods.

"Some time ago," states a retail dealer, "a woman customer asked me the price of cheese. I told her it was 16 cents."

"But I can get it at Blank's for 14," she replied.

"Very well," I said, "if you can, you certainly should, but I cannot sell cheese at 16 cents and make a living."

The woman went to Blank's, got the cheese and on her way home called in again. The dealer asked her to let him see it. He placed it in the scale and its weight was exactly 14 ounces.

The competitor's scale of course may have been wrong. Let him have the benefit of the doubt. But when the question of a lower competitive price comes up it might be well for the dealer to point out among other things that he gives honest weight.

ST. JOHN DEALER BELIEVES IN SELLING FISH

Uses the Window Frequently and Makes Many Changes—How He Sells More Oysters, Clams and Lobsters.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 11.—(Special)—"Since trying the experiment successfully myself," said a local dealer this week, "I have been much in favor of a grocer if favorably located, conducting a fish department in addition to his regular line of provisions. And there is no reason why he should not as strictly attend to its operation as he does to his grocery trade. For my part, I make it a point to change my lines of window features in my fish store more frequently even than I do in the other branch, and I find it very practical.

"To one who is fond of oysters or clams, they can appear quite tempting while he is passing, or in the store without thought of purchasing, if displayed in glass jars on shelves in the window, and oftentimes I have a customer say to me, 'Those look pretty nice, I hadn't thought of them, but I think I had better have some.'

"Another means of attracting attention, to which I often resort, is in piling my window full of nice looking lobsters, with pieces of ice liberally scattered over them, and reserving a space in the centre for placing two or three of the largest of them which I have had my fisherman keep alive. The contrast of the blackish green as opposed to the bright red of the boiled lobsters is quite striking and will attract instantaneous attention. Many will say that the spectacle is not inviting, that there is a possibility of turning one against a taste for lobsters, but I do not agree with this. In attracting the attention of passers-by by the live lobsters clawing about, their dead brothers also receive their share, and I have tried the scheme too often to find fault from this score."

OUR BUSINESS WITH WEST INDIES.

Four years ago the shipments of Canadian flour to British West Indies was only 900 barrels. In 1910 the figure had risen to 7,269. Canada supplies about one-third of the imports of butter and one-seventh of cheese. Although 48,000 cases of condensed milk went to the islands last year, Canada supplied none. The total imports of fish have increased very little in the past five years, yet Canada has about two-thirds of the present imports to her credit.

J. & J. Colman, London, England, have this year again gotten out an attractive and useful diary and memorandum book. It has a handsome substantial leather cover and many have to thank Magor Son & Co., through their representative, E. W. Pyke, Toronto, for copy of this diary.

Have you ever thought that a great many grocers needlessly limit the sale of

to the Christmas season and thereby suggest to their trade that mince meat is only good to eat at that particular time?

Has it ever occured to you that these grocers are throwing away money just as much so as if they took cash from the till and threw it down the sewer?

Think it over. It is worth while.

Is there one real good, live reason why it should be so? Especially so when our mince meat is procurable.

Will the Free Hog Movement Continue

Question Which is Bothering Dealers — Has Been Fairly Free During Early Winter, Although Rather Stinted of Late—Egg Prices Have Fallen From High Christmas Level—Stocks of Butter Light—Cheese Has Lost None of Its Strength—Export Enquiry Lends Steadiness.

Some time ago many dealers looked for a falling off in hog receipts before many weeks. They pointed to the continued good movement during the fall months as a basis for their opinion. Still, arrivals have kept at a fairly good level, although of late they have been rather stinted. How much of this is due to the interference of the holidays is uncertain. The question of importance is still therefore, whether the brisk movement will continue. There is no manner by which the number of available hogs in the country can be ascertained. It seems to be conceded, however, that considering the high price of feed hogs on the hoof should be well worth the values that have been ruling during past few weeks. The English market, also a factor in shaping prices is quiet and steady, Canadian bacon ruling from 48s to 52s.

Prices of new laid eggs have at most centres eased off from the high figures ruling around Christmas. An early increase in production has been the cause. Storage stocks seem to be holding steady with even increased prices being asked at some centres following the higher prices noted across the line.

Butter shows no perceptible change. Last week the quiet period of demand was responsible for a slight easing off at some centres but in face of higher stocks than a year ago and only moderate receipts it appears as if steadiness were warranted.

Cheese has lost none of its strength, the big shortage both in production here and in England having made itself felt in high range of prices on both sides of the water. Export enquiry lends strength to the market in Canada.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—A decline of ¼ cent per lb in pure and compound lard is a feature of market this week together with fairly good demand from retailers for barrelled pork and dry salt pork. Ten car loads sent to railway construction camps in the west was one nice "little" order that was filled last Saturday and was worth noting. Demand for these meats locally is rather good and lard is moving steadily. Preparations are being made already, according to a report from a large local concern, for the Easter and spring trade. It is rather a far cry to the first week of April, but a big sale is assured and the necessary preparations will soon be under way.

EGGS.—New laid eggs slumped decidedly during past week the full decline totalling ten cents and the present price is now 45 cents a doz. The receipts up to last Saturday night were 225,489 cases since May 1, as against 187,538 cases for the same period last year. Demand for eggs is good and the heavier and earlier production this year has made the price of new laids easy. Storage eggs have a fair sale.

PROVISIONS.—Trade in pork products is still inclined to quietness. Hog prices were raised 25 cents per cwt. this week to induce freer deliveries. Receipts of late have slackened considerably.

Some dealers would quote light and medium hams ½ cent above present quotations. Lard holds steady under a good sale, most dealers reporting that stocks of this line are being kept well cleaned up.

BUTTER.—Butter prices are changed from week ago. That prices are extremely high is true but dealers believe that conditions warrant present prices. The smaller stocks than in other years at this time are pointed to as reason for present steadiness.

There is some creamery coming along but a considerable quantity has that "feedy" flavor that is not wanted. Receipts of high quality dairy are light.

EGGS.—The feature of the market this week is a stiffening in storage, an advance of 1 to 2 cents being noted. The recent cold snap has no doubt curtailed production of new laids somewhat. "It is surprising," one dealer said, "that there isn't a keener demand for new laids at the price. People seem to be using storage instead. They are stiffening up of late."

In the States storage eggs have also increased in value. Stocks held here are generally believed to be rather small, a conservative amount having been put away by many firms last summer. While some houses may hold fair stocks, there are others decidedly the other way.

CHEESE.—Dealers say they see nothing in immediate future to break high prices ruling. Trade is rather inclined to quietness. Stiltons are seemingly held somewhat firmer at 17 to 18 cents.

POULTRY.—Prices on dressed poultry generally show an advance of 1 to 2 cents per pound this week. As reported the clean up after Christmas day was next thing to complete. Then cooler weather set in which naturally improves sales. Shipments to markets of late have been small. Hence the increase in values. Enquiry this week has been large for the season, thanks to the colder weather.

BUYING NEW PRUNES.

By W.J.B., a la Walt Mason.

The other day down street I went, on buying new prunes firmly bent. I called into a grocery store, the boss he met me at the door. "I want some prunes, the new ones too," I said to him ; he said he knew. He then reached down and grabbed a box, in which there rested two old socks, a doll, a cart, a bunch of fur, the grocer's baby had left there. He pulled them out and tossed them back, they fell into the sugar sack, the cat jumped up and from it ran, just missed a kick from the groceryman. He then went on to dig the prunes, which had rested there for many moons, the dust it rested on the top, where baby hadn't knocked it off. Said I to him, "Are those prunes new ?" he then looked wise as if he knew, and said, "oh yes," and went right on, to dig the fruit with his dirty tongs, which he had used a while before to dig the herrings at the door. "I don't think so," I answered back. His hand it rested on the sack, his eyes flared up, his anger rose, his teeth shone out in two bright rows. Said he to me, "Sir, I don't lie, I don't need your trade, you needn't buy." He slammed the prune box on the floor, meanwhile I headed for the door, and then went home to tell my wife, the tribulations of this life. I tell you, sir, it won't be soon, when I go out to buy new prunes.

Stronger Tone to Flour and Cereals

Rolled Oats Holding Up Firmer, Although There is Still Price-cutting in Some Quarters—Flour, as Denoted by Wheat Market, is Steady and Stronger—Trade Has Not Yet Recovered From Quietness—Argentine Still a Big Factor—Variations in Reports from that Republic.

Judging by the markets for the raw material, there is a stronger feeling in both flour and rolled oats this week. The observation was made this week that seldom before has so much Manitoba grain been sold for future export shipment as during the past month or two. Recent bids are the highest on the 1911 crop.

Flour trade has not fully recovered from holiday quietude. Although there is an improvement in some directions, it cannot be said to be general. A feature of the week is the improved inquiry from European sources for Canadian flour at slightly higher figures.

The weather in Argentine is a strong factor in operating the wheat barometer. Adverse reports will stiffen up the market while perhaps the next day a change to brightness will counteract this stiffness. One thing that stands out quite prominent is that although there is plenty of wheat in Canadian Northwest there is a scarcity of good milling wheat.

The lower prices for rolled oats have stimulated sales considerably. The market as denoted by prices for the raw material is firm, but price-cutting is not yet an unheard of thing. The oat market has been standing up stronger of late.

World's wheat shipments last week totalled 6,768,000 bushels as compared with 10,128,000 the previous week, and 9,856,000 a year ago. Compared with a week ago the visible wheat in the United States decreased 783,000 bushels, but the total visible on Jan. 8 was 69,706,000 bushels as against 43,920,000 a year ago.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Following an improved feeling in the primary market the local flour market is stronger, but prices are unchanged. The city retail demand is good, but the country buyers seem to have supplies yet. Unfavorable advices from the Argentine has stirred up interest in the primary market and quotations are considerably stronger. Hence the general feeling of strength in the market.

TORONTO.

FLOUR.—The wheat market, taken as a gauge, flour holds a stronger position this week. Prices, however, still hold at the $5.50 level for first patents in car lots. Recent prices on Manitoba wheat are the highest yet reached for the 1911 crop, No. 1 northern selling up to $1.10½. A great deal of Canadian wheat is being worked off for export while there has recently been a good enquiry for flour from European sources.

Domestic trade has not yet recovered from the quietness which made itself felt during holidays.

CEREALS.—Rolled oats have not changed in price this week. The market is steady and firm, although price-cutting is still reported in some quarters. The lower prices have stimulated demand from retailers. The market for the raw material is again strong, Manitoba oats reaching their high point during the week, namely 48c for No. 2 at bay ports.

SANITARY INSPECTION OF STORES

In North Dakota, the State Board of Health carries on a sanitary inspection of stores where food products are exposed for sale. A bulletin recently issued shows that although a number of stores stood well up on the list, there were only two in the whole state that made an absolutely perfect mark. However, there has been a marked improvement in the way in which North Dakota grocery stores have been kept since the new regulations have come into force.

A little more care in the baking, combined with the very best ingredients, results in making Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas considerably better than the next best. These sodas never deviate from the high standard of quality, always retaining their delectable charm.

Frost Damages California Oranges

One Grower Sets Injury at 30 Per Cent., But Exact Amount Will Not be Evident for a Time—Fruit Trade Has Not Yet Recovered From Early January Quietude—California Celery Continues Scarce and High—Florida Will be Ready Shortly—Cranberries and Grapefruit Hold High.

The fruit trade is still in clasp of post-holiday dullness, and fruit men are being afforded a rest after a brisk December rush. Retail fruit dealers are no doubt cleaning up any left-overs, while consumers are evidently trying to economize after their heavy expenditures during the festive season and fruit is one of the lines to suffer. The extremely cold weather has also put a damper on fruit shipping. An early recovery to normal conditions is hoped for.

It is a little early to tell what damage was done to California citrus crop by late December frosts. However, there was no doubt considerable, every district being more or less affected but especially the low lands. One grower estimates that the citrus crop of the state will be reduced 10,000 cars below previous estimates, or 30 per cent. damage to oranges and a little more to lemons. It will take some little time to ascertain real amount of damage.

The features of California celery are light movement, high prices and small sizes. Growers can only care for about 50 per cent. of business offered. Florida stock which will be ready shortly will fill a want on Canadian markets.

Oranges share in the quietness, but there is a fairly steady movement. Grapefruit continues high. Florida as well as some Jamaicas are coming along. Cranberries hold high. The end of the Malaga grape season should soon loom in sight.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—Malaga grapes are a little firmer and the end of the season should soon appear. Cranberries are firm and the prices are generally strong. There is a little quietness in the trade following New Year's. Apples continue to move out steadily at firm prices.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS.—Trade has not yet recovered from its temporary lull following the festive season. The heavier purchases by consumers during the holidays naturally cause them to be somewhat careful for a time afterwards. Oranges are doing fairly well as are also grapefruit and lemons. Oranges are somewhat easier. Cranberries hold high but there is a tendency to neglect this line at present.

Apples are quiet, although offerings are quite plentiful. Last year stocks were small and what were offered were taken up at stiff figures. This year's crop was larger. Farmers themselves have been trying to work off their holdings and thus the quietness in apple trade through commission men.

VEGETABLES.—Briskness is lacking in vegetables, although some lines are meeting with a fairly steady demand. Mushrooms are lower at 50 to 60 cents. The same tendency to scant stock still exists in beets, carrots, turnips and parsnips.

There is nothing but home-grown celery offered now, the imported article being withheld on account of the high price ruling. The movement of California stock is light. Florida will be ready shortly.

Fish - Oysters

Cold Weather Puts Life Into Fish Trade

Good Increase in Sale of Frozen Lines—Severe Weather May End Fishing Operations in East in Short While—Supply of Fish From Pacific Coast Plentiful—No Overplus in Pickled and Salt Fish—Bulk Oyster Season a Good One.

One of features of fish trade since advent of cold weather is the sale of frozen lines. Reports from fish points in the east are that on account of severe weather, fishing operations may come to an end in a short while. This would cut short supply of staple lines such as cod, haddies, smelts, etc. On the other hand, the supply from the Pacific Coast is plentiful, partially owing to the small demand experienced in December, which month is the best of the year for distribution.

In the pickled and salt fish lines the market is reported short, particularly of codfish, and although the supply of herrings is above the average, the tendency is rather for higher prices. In oyster lines, the stocks of good malpeques in shell are quite reduced, and what is left should command a big price. The bulk oyster trade has been one of the best seasons the trade has ever experienced, but the heavy demand in this country and the United States has brought the producing price to a high figure. Business has been moving satisfactorily and in a short time the trade will have to begin preparations for the Lenten season.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—A fair demand for fish is passing just now, and during the next few weeks a still greater improvement should be noticed. Prices are quite reasonable from the standpoint of the retailer and consumer, and favorable weather conditions make handling of fish comparatively easy.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—Fishing during past week has been only fair. Weather for first part was mild, but turned cold and blowy so that big catches were not recorded. Much of what is now being offered for sale in salmon, mackeral, herring, and other lines, is frozen stock, but the sales have been very good, and the market well supplied. Smelts are expected to be more plentiful now that fishing will be permissible through the ice on the Kennebecasis River, but up to present, run has been none too promising. Quantities of haddock and cod are being brought for the local trade from Newfoundland, as well as from down the bay. The fact that season for lobsters opened earlier in St. John and Charlotte Counties, gave the local trade a fair supply of these much earlier than is generally the case, but at present the stock is not large.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—Fish trade is now coming into its own. With real cold weather of past week or so, business has been humming and extremely satisfactory in volume to local fish dealers. Frozen varieties have been selling well, with lake trout reported to be moving especially well. Halibut is also good seller, and smoked and pickled lines are coming in for their full share of attention. Labrador frozen sea herring seem to be coming forward quite slowly. Stocks of halibut held are said to be none too plentiful.

FISH GOING TO AUSTRALIA.

The exports of Canadian fish to Australia in 1909 amounted to $249,845. In 1910 it was increased to $490,690. The increase of $240,845 was made up of canned fish, chiefly salmon, and accounts in part for the decreased amount available for home consumption. The greater portion of Canada's exports to Australia consist of canned fish, but the prospects for increased trade in smoked, dried, and salt fish are good, now that plenty of cold storage space is available on steamers from Montreal and St. John to Australian ports.

SANITARY BY-LAW.

St. John Board of Health to Watch Conditions of Foodstuffs.

St. John, Jan. 10.—(Special)—Regulations of interest to the grocery trade were passed at a recent meeting of the Board of Health, when a discussion took place concerning the covering of goods placed on sale in stores for food.

A by-law was submitted for approval regulating the exposure for sale of food products. Such of these as are generally eaten raw, the by-law provides, must be protected in some way, or covered entirely, so that dust from either store or street will not settle, or flies gather upon them. This measure applies not only to foodstuffs exposed for sale on the street, outside the entrance to the store, but inside as well.

Another important measure was that while being conveyed through the streets or roadways, all meats intended for commercial purposes, must be fully covered or protected from flies, or other insects, or dust. These suggestions were thoroughly approved by the board, and will be put in force as soon as possible. They will affect quite a number of local retailers, but many of the latter, knowing the value of good, cleanly premises and foodstuffs, have done something to this end some time ago.

Newfoundland Frozen Herring

We are fortunate in having large supplies now because the demand is large and we do not like to have any disappointed customers. You will want some. How many?

Lenten Trade

Are you getting your fish department into shape? You certainly should take good sound advice and prepare because there is no gainsaying the fact that Fish trade is yours if you get a "hump on" and go after it.

A Successful Experiment

Every retail merchant that is alive to his requirements has found that some lines do not pay him. The difference in the methods of buying and selling certain lines is confusing and one of them is ciscoes.

We have solved the problem.

We now offer a new and guaranteed line of smoked fish in demand in every town and that SELLS ITSELF, and, moreover, offers a SURE PROFIT.

For some years past the smoked ciscoe business has been carried on on a commission basis. That is, the wholesale trade simply sold the product of the different fishermen on a commission. There was no particular attention paid to packing or curing the fish. You bought them in full baskets or half-full baskets, well smoked or half-smoked, varying in size and quality from good to good-for-nothing, at so much per basket.

You had NO CHANCE TO MAKE A PROFIT or to bring a customer back to your store.

We have adopted a modern method.

We determined that the only way to give the dealer a fair chance and the customer what he paid for was to sell these on a weight basis. Accordingly we designed a nice box to hold a standard weight of fish, which would do away with the results of rough handling and pilfering in transit, and keep the ciscoes in the best order.

After arranging for a continued winter supply we went after the most experienced fish smokers to be had—and got them.

The stock has exceeded our greatest expectation and has been snapped up by the local trade. We are now enlarging our plant. We have been obliged to ask our regular trade to have patience for a couple of weeks.

We guarantee every fish shipped. Boxes contain 15 lbs. of fish. Price furnished on request.

They bring repeat orders. GET THEM.

Reasons For Accepting Mail-Order Ad

Newspaper Editor Has Complaints From Local Merchants—Points Out That Only Two Are Advertising—To What the Mail Order Houses Owe Their Success.

Reasons for accepting a mail-order house advertisement are plainly given by "The Greetings," a newspaper in Port Hood, Cape Breton. The editor has been criticized by merchants of the town but he points out that at present only two local merchants advertise in "The Greetings," that these are successful business men and not afraid of mail order competition and that therefore he was quite justified in accepting the advertisement.

In his explanation printed below, he brings out a number of forcible reasons why merchants should advertise. In the first place they should help to build up home industries and patronize the paper that makes their town known to the outside world. More important, if mail order houses depend in advertising to get the trade, the local dealer should advertise to increase his business. Following is the editor's own explanation :

Last issue we published an advertisement from one of the mail order houses of Upper Canada. Many of the town merchants have since expressed their disapproval of such advertising and are charging us with disloyalty to the town of Port Hood, but when the facts of the case are made known, our readers will no doubt, have a different opinion about the action taken by the "Greetings" in this respect.

Only Two Advertising.

First, in glancing over the pages of this paper we find but two local merchants advertising therein, and they, we might add, have no fear of mail order house competition. They know that their prices and goods cannot be bettered by anywhere in Canada, and they are not afraid to say so through the press. These two merchants are successful in business, they are large contributors towards the upkeep of the town and its institutions, and are confident that the people of this community will patronize them, providing they (the merchants) patronize home industry. We have left our columns open to the home merchants for a number of years, at about one half the cost that the mail order houses pay for their advertising, yet we find that apart from the merchants mentioned the offer has been rejected. The "Greetings" is one of Port Hood's industries, it gives employment to others, it advocates the upbuilding of the town, it is the only means to-day through which the town is advertised to the outside world, and it must be supported financially, if not by local then by outside patronage. Many local merchants look upon the home paper as of no value for advertising but when large mail order houses will pay double the usual rate for an advertisement in its columns, the home merchant must be mistaken.

Some Success to Advertising.

Mail order houses throughout the world owe their success, not to the prices and goods they offer, but to the advertising they send broadcast throughout the land. If one should enquire of one of the managers of these houses, "where lies the secret of your success?" the answer would invariably be, "in advertising." They recognize the value of the space in the "Greetings" and are willing to pay a high price for it, while the home merchant has the idea that money invested in advertising is money wasted. In conclusion we will say that so long as the merchants have that opinion about advertising in the local paper, just so long will the Upper Canada mail order houses drain the cash from the community at the expense of all concerned. Our columns are still open to the merchants. We must make the "Greetings" support itself, and if all merchants were as loyal to the industries of the town as they should be they would profit thereby. It is up to them to think it over.

CAR SHORTAGE AROUND DAUPHIN

Serious Delays Being Caused—Not Much Injury to Grain Through Ice.

Dauphin, Man., Jan. 11 (Special).—Business in this section has been good, the only drawback being lack of cars for shipping grain. The threshing here is pretty well over and crops generally have turned out fairly well, especially where the land was given a chance with anything like good farming. The grain blockade, however, has been serious. It is estimated by grain men in Dauphin that not one-fourth of the grain is yet marketed.

At Gilbert Plains grain men estimate there were 800,000 bushels of different kinds of grain raised in the vicinity of that town this season. Of that quantity only about 140,000 have been marketed.

The day before the writer visited that town a large number of farmers were compelled to take their loads of grain back home, some of them living eight to ten miles away, and all on account of the elevators being filled, and there being no cars to relieve the congestion. This is but a sample of conditions in many places. However, the weather remains fairly cold, and the grain is suffering little damage. The fear expressed in a recent issue of The Grocer of damage of ice mixing with the grain is not likely to have much effect, there being too little of it to cause serious injury.

Annual Staff Gatherings

Montreal, Jan. 10.—John Farquharson, president of the Montreal Biscuit Co., Montreal, gave the salesmen and office staff a complimentary dinner on December 28th, 40 in all being present. Salesmen from all parts of Canada were in for the occasion and plans for the coming year discussed.

Thos. J. Potter, who has been a traveler with the firm for the past 26 years, acted as chairman.

E. W. GILLETT CO., LTD.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—The annual convention of the salesmen of E. W. Gillett Co. was held in Toronto, from Jan. 3rd to 6th. Representatives from the extreme western and eastern points in Canada, and also Newfoundland were in attendance, about thirty-five in all. Business sessions were held during the day, at which various matters of importance were discussed. As it has always been the desire of the company to make these conventions entertaining as well as instructive, the visiting representatives as the guests of the company attended the performances at the different theatres. On Friday evening a banquet was held at the Hotel Mossop. When the tables had been cleared, the toastmaster, Mr. Wm. Dobie, proposed the toast "To the King," which was responded to by Mr. Holden. Mr. Sinclair, of Winnipeg, on behalf of the salesmen, in a few well chosen words, presented to Mr. Dobie, the president of the Gillett Co., a very handsome brass desk set, as a token of the kindly feeling toward him by the men on the road. After the speeches, the singing of "God Save the King" and "Auld Lang Syne" closed a pleasant evening.

W. J. Cherney, of Windsor, Ont., has taken into partnership Frank Bourdeay and Chas. O'Heron, who have been in his employ for a number of years. The firm name has been changed to the Cherney Grocery Co.

Sprague & Williamson, Medicine Hat, Alta., have taken over the grocery business of L. B. Cochran.

MONTREAL—CARDINAL—TORONTO—BRANTFORD—VANCOUVER

Sales MUST Repeat

Over nine hundred thousand housewives now use FIVE ROSES—
Because it has the Selling Ability.
The same difference that exists between a counter attendant and a good salesman.

Do YOU know what that means?
Just this—
That the first bag must sell the second.

Advertising has a tremendous driving force—yet it can sell only one bag.

Your own salesmanship can make only first sales—trial orders.

The flour itself must have the compelling magnetic influence that draws irresistibly the customer back in spite of price and favor.

Twenty-three years ago there were —all told—only 800 barrels of FIVE ROSES flour sold in the world.

To-day there flows out of the big FIVE ROSES mills a constant uniform stream—10,500 barrels a day. Can any sane person deny in the face of such brutal facts that FIVE ROSES must possess a compelling sales force?

FIVE ROSES will not sell itself—no flour will.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

But once introduced, Brother Grocer, your trade is riveted for all time.

A woman can no more give up the FIVE ROSES habit than she can abandon her keen ambition for better baking.

Consider merely the dollar-and-cents side—just think how safe your trade might be—

If YOU could sell FIVE ROSES flour.

Maybe you can—maybe you can't, for we don't sell everybody, remember that.

Write our nearest office—perhaps we can come together.

Write NOW.

If you could stand beside each clerk as he makes a sale, and make a note of the details there'd not be much chance for mistakes, would there?

You would know the amount and kind of the transaction, and who handled it.

You would know that the customer got the right change, and that you got the right amount of money.

You'd have a record of every cash transaction in the store that would make the night's "balance" a very simple matter.

And your clerks would be better salesmen, more careful and accurate because they would get credit for good work, and know that the blame for mistakes would be fixed beyond dispute.

That's exactly what a National Cash Register does for you

The amount and kind of each transaction is publicly displayed and a positive and permanent record kept for your private inspection.

Separate adding wheels show you the totals of Cash Sales, Charge Sales, Money Received on Account and Money Paid Out—at any time during the day.

The Sales Strip, kept locked inside the machine, gives you an itemized record of every transaction made during the day—just as complete as if you followed your clerks all day and recorded the various amounts yourself.

You know how many customers each clerk waited on—the amount of each clerk's sales for the day, a separate record of each sale—who made the mistakes—who did the best work—and you know exactly the amount that should be in the cash drawer.

The National keeps track of every detail of every transaction—stops leaks, checks losses. How can you afford to be without one?

You place yourself under no obligation by writing for Free booklets, explaining the uses of National Cash Registers in your business. Write now to in Quaker Oats Window Display Announcement in last week's issue of this publication.

CORRECTION OF ERROR

OWING TO A MISTAKE, copy announcing a modification of the window display contest applying to the United States only, was forwarded to The Canadian Grocer for insertion in the January 12th issue.

WE REGRET THE ERROR.

There has been NO CHANGE WHATEVER in our original offer to Canadian retail grocers, which is as follows:

PREMIUMS TO GROCERS

Their Boys and Girls or Clerks

Thousands of Them $1 to $100 Each

We offer these premiums for Window and Store Displays.

They are offered as payments, not prizes. So every grocer may earn one.

Displays may be made of Quaker Oats, family size or regular size. Or they may include both.

All display signs, price cards, etc., must be supplied by the store. Quaker Oats advertisements clipped from magazines, etc., may be used to attract attention.

Displays must be made during December or January, the best selling season on Quaker Oats.

To secure a premium, it is absolutely necessary that a photograph of the display be sent to us. No other evidence will do. On the back of the photograph write your name and address.

A Kodak picture 2 x 2 in. will do. This picture may be taken with a Brownie Kodak, costing only $1.

All photographs must be in our hands by February 5th. Checks for the premiums will be mailed in February.

We name as a committee to decide on the best displays:

MR. E. M. TROWERN, Toronto
Dominion Secretary Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.

MR. J. L. MAUDE, Toronto
Secretary Window Trimmers' Association of Canada.

The selling power of a display of this kind is its chiefest merit. Its purpose is to sell oatmeal. A hundred packages of Quaker Oats piled prominently inside the store, either on the end of the counter or on a table, with clever signs attached, is oftentimes a better selling display than the same goods placed in the window.

Displays will be judged by their power to sell Quaker Oats. Put your display where it will sell the most goods.

For the best display	$100.00
For the second best display	50.00
For the third best display	25.00
For the five next best displays	10.00 each
For the twenty next best displays	5.00 each
For every other display, containing three cases or more, of which a photograph is sent	1.00 each

In the case of a tie—where the judges cannot decide which display best deserves one of the larger premiums—the premium will be divided among the two or more whose displays seem of equal value.

Has Your Boy or Girl a Camera?

If you don't care for yourself, you have a clerk who cares, or a boy or girl, perhaps.

Note that every display gets a premium if a photograph is sent. But no grocer gets more than one.

The lowest premium—one dollar—will buy a Brownie Kodak, with which the picture may be taken. So any grocer who makes a display—or his boy or girl—is sure of enough to pay for this camera. And he has an equal chance with the others for a larger premium.

Somebody around you wants to earn one of these premiums. Give that somebody a chance.

To you, Mr. Grocer, the best payment will come in increased sales of Quaker Oats. Let people know that you specialize in it. Let them know that you handle this favorite brand.

Nothing is more important—more trade-winning now—than a corking display of Quaker Oats. Make it now, while we offer to pay for it. Or let somebody around you make it.

Address all Photographs to Bad Debts Chief Cause of Many Failures

Safety Lies Either in Cash Business or Setting Time Limit on any Doubtful Customer—Some Instances of Where Money was Lost—Cunning Method of Professional Dead-beat—Where Misfortunes Cause Losses.

The chief aim of every grocer is to make sales at a living profit.

The next is to get the money for the goods sold.

Here is just where many are not making money. There are few dealers not selling strictly for cash who cannot relate instance after instance where they have been beaten out of their just dues by dishonest people, or in some cases by customers with good intentions but who had met with misfortune.

Why not sell for cash? This is the natural question one on the outside is inclined to immediately ask. This would be all very well no doubt in many cases. But there are dealers who would not think of going in for the strictly cash business. They would lose good customers, they claim, and what they wouldn't lose would not purchase as many goods. Certain localities evidently do not allow of the exclusive cash business.

Giving Wholesale Credit.

But there are glaring instances where dealers who know they are dealing with poor pays and yet who give them credit for an indefinite length of time. "If we do not give credit, somebody else will," they say. The result is at the end of the year they find several hundred dollars worth of bad debts on their books.

Set Time Limit.

Why not place a time limit on any doubtful customer?

This seems to be the only safe course to follow where an exclusive cash business cannot be conducted. And it should be strictly adhered to. It certainly would be better to lose a customer through enforcing such a system than to lose a couple of hundred dollars a year through that customer. The dealer would be in the goods at least. In most cases if the matter were put up fairly to a new customer asking for credit, he or she would see the force of it.

Here is a case in point:—

A grocer was opening a new store in a certain district about which he was not very familiar. A traveler for a wholesale house, who was acquainted with the character of many of the residents of the community, suggested that he watch his credit customers carefully. At the beginning everybody was paying cash. Soon one woman bought $4 worth of goods early in the week promising to pay Saturday night. Saturday night came but the money didn't Tuesday of next week the woman sent over for more goods but word was returned that she couldn't have them until the promised $4 was paid. She became quite indignant and said she would buy no more from that store. Now, however, she is a customer there and pays cash for her goods. Just how much that grocer would have had on his books by this time had he submitted can only be imagined.

Cunning Ways of Dead Beat.

This woman might not have been a professional dead beat, but here is a story that certainly does reveal one. It is an actual instance told by the dealer himself who lost the money, and shows the craftiness of the man who doesn't want to pay for what he gets.

What lead him to tell the story was the question of a traveler who happened to be in the store at the time an old man bought something on credit.

"Is that man a relative of yours?" asked the traveler.

"Why no," replied the grocer.

"Is he a particular friend; do you know him well?"

"Neither friend nor relative," answered the dealer whose curiosity was somewhat aroused, and he wanted to know the why and the wherefore of the questions.

Simply because he owes————, on ——— street, over $30, and he can't get a cent out of him. Call up ——— and ask him."

The dealer called up the other grocer and found the news was true. The man now owed him about $15.

This brought out the information on how the old man had become a customer.

"He came in one day, told me he had moved into the district, ordered some goods to be sent over C.O.D., and tendered the information that he would be a regular customer.

"The goods were sent over in the morning, and all he had to pay for them was a $10 bill which the delivery man couldn't change. The bill amounted to about 63 cents, and he promised to come over in the afternoon and pay it. He did as he promised.

Produces Another $10 Bill.

"Early on another morning he called for some goods and handed me out a $10 bill. I hadn't any change so early in the day as I always was accustomed to deposit the cash every afternoon. He promised to come back in the afternoon and pay the account.

"In the afternoon, true to his promise, back he came, and I changed the $10 for him. A few minutes later he returned stating I had given him $2 too much. I said I didn't think that was possible. I might have made an error of $1 but was sure it couldn't have been two. He insisted he was right, and of course I had to take the $2.

"Now that I know him I can see it was simply a scheme to demonstrate his supposed honesty."

The money is still owing.

Misfortune Causes Big Debt.

Another dealer tells of the loss of $150 through the illness of the landlady of a large boarding house.

"Every week that woman used to purchase about $40 worth of goods from me and at the end of every month I was sure of my $150 or more. She kept a large boarding house. Just a short time ago she became seriously ill and had to go to the hospital for an operation which demanded $100 at the outset. Her son was left in charge of the house and between $40 and $50 worth of goods were still bought from me.

"First month went by and I got no money and it was the same with the second. The son seemed to spend everything he got and boarders became dissatisfied and left. I went to the hospital to see the woman. She promised to have her son pay $75 or more on account. Anyway, she said she had a $2,000 life insurance policy under her pillow, and had given instructions that if she died her legal debts would be paid out of that first.

"I left feeling confident, and extended the credit another week, but by the time the woman was better all her boarders had left, and her son, who wasn't much good, left his home and his mother with two small children.

"I haven't the heart to ask her for the money now, and there goes $150. What is a man to do in a case like that?"

This certainly seems to be a case where foresight would not have been any use. The customer was a good one at $150 per month, had always paid promptly, and even when she was ill the dealer was almost sure of his money.

But there are a great many cases where leaks through bad debts could be stopped. A grocer knows best how each of his customers is situated, and should either demand cash from the poor pays or place a time limit on credit. This would, no doubt, lose him one or more patrons, but those who are honest will see the force of the argument and the others are better lost.

Tell them you have to pay for your goods every month and now that operating expenses are high you would like to have your money as early as possible.

Have Distinct Understanding.

To a fairly good customer who cannot pay cash always, carefully find out when would be the most opportune time to pay. Suggest at end of each week. If she says, yes, she guesses that will be alright, then make it definite that at the end of every week you are to receive your money. Make it a distinct understanding with her so that she will be under an obligation to you.

To a known poor pay say that your business obligations make it necessary that you receive cash always. Have a definite understanding that you must have the money at time of sale so that if such a customer asks for credit later on you can recall the agreement.

Many dealers not now making a success at the credit business think things would be different if they changed to cash. This is only problematical because there are not many chances of a man making a success with cash if he proved a failure with credit.

The safe system if goods are sold on credit is to eliminate the bad debts.

Edmonton Merchants Wait on City Council

Ask for Abolition of Business Tax and Increase of License Fee on Transient Traders—How Latter Arrive in Busy Seasons, and at Little Expense, Take Away Cream of Trade—Of No Benefit to City, They Claim.

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 18—(Special)—That the business tax is not popular among local dealers, was shown by a deputation from the Retail Merchants' Association before the City Council at their last meeting.

The question was gone fully into between the deputation and the Council, and a committee was appointed by the mayor to consider the requests of the merchants. A report will be brought forward on the question.

Other matters were also taken up such as transient traders legislation and enforcement of the act.

The delegation asked for the abolition of the business tax, the merits and demerits of which have been under discussion for so long that the merchants considered it hardly necessary to enter into arguments.

The mayor remarked that it was not yet too late to have an amendment to the charter incorporated among the amendments to be shortly enacted by the Legislature. And if it were decided to abolish this business tax the administration would ask that the amendment be so included.

$300 a Year for Peddlers.

The question of charging a flat rate of $300 per annum, regardless of the time in the year within which application is made, for transient salesmen, did demand much discussion. The argument was provoked purposely by Ald. Hyndman wishing the cause expounded and by Alderman McInnis asking to be "shown" why local merchants should be protected. Alderman McInnis could not see why the transient salesman should be heavily licensed and the local merchant relieved of the business tax. If one were relieved, both should be relieved, the alderman argued.

The delegation pointed out that at times of the year when seasons open, when the demand for merchandise is maximum by a large degree, transient salesmen drop into town, rent a room, display goods and advertise them extensively, take the cream of the season, and then depart. On the other hand, the local merchant must maintain his store the year round, taking the duller periods with the brisk, being under nominally the same expense the year round.

Twenty Per cent. to do Business.

It was stated that it costs 20 per cent. of profits to do business the year round in Edmonton. To the merchant or salesman who does business only during the time when business is at its maximum this percentage is remarkably smaller. The man coming to Edmonton for the purpose of entering into legitimate business is welcomed, declared the delegation; but the man who comes merely to participate in the cream of the trade at the spring and fall season openings, is the man who is not a legitimate merchant, is the man who is being kept out of other cities of the Dominion, and is the man from whom the business interests of any city has a legitimate right to ask protection. The individuals who drop into a city, and make a temporary splash by fair means or foul, gathers in considerable money and flies by night, is the man whom the association wishes to be regulated by the imposing of a good and sufficient tax.

Sold $7,000 in Furs.

An instance was cited where a fur house of Toronto sent a man here this fall with a stock of furs and within a surprisingly short time gathered $7,000 in cold cash, and took his departure. For this privilege he paid the city a license of $150.

It was likewise suggested that steps be taken to prevent a firm incorporated in another province coming to this province and by paying a nominal registration fee, being entitled to do business in any city without paying heed to any city by-laws, city license fees or anything regarding municipal regulation. To eliminate this, provincial legislation will be required.

A committee was appointed by the mayor to confer with the association executive and report to the council.

By-law Not Enforced.

During the discussion it was stated by members of the delegation that the by-law, inadequate as it may be, has by no means been enforced, and that the association has been able to get little satisfaction from those having in charge that work.

It was asked from the council why the association had not secured evidence against and conviction of violations of the by-law. To this it was replied that the association expected the officials entrusted with that duty to perform it, and it was not the purpose of the organization to prosecute cases in court.

BRITISH-CANADIAN CANNERS.

The British-Canadian Canners, Ltd., Montreal, the formation of which company was announced recently, will erect factories at Merlin, Highgate, Port Robinson, Bowmanville and Cobourg. Contracts have been made with local farmers at these points. It is their intention to have plants ready by May 1. John Wall will be the general manager. The directors of the company comprise Sir Henry N. Bate, Ottawa, and J. P. Black, H. A. Lovett, K.C., and R. Brutinel, all of Montreal.

The Kootenay Jam Co. are contemplating erecting a manufacturing plant in Victoria, B.C. This firm began business about four years ago near Nelson, B.C., and later moved to Mission Junction to obtain better transportation. The company have recently decided to open a branch for the manufacture of chocolate.

Flour and Cereals in Prominence Now

Market Movement in Past Few Years—Few Changes in Flour During 1911—Present a Splendid Time to Push Flour and Cereals—Dealer Should Acquaint Public With Commendable Features of Flour—Value of Window Display—Freshness the Keynote in Cereals.

Greater interest is now being displayed in flour and cereals for the reason that the present is a favorable season for creating sales, and because the retail dealer has more time to give to working up trade for these lines. Past movements of the market are naturally of interest to the grocer.

The year 1911 has not been marked by many or very drastic changes in flour prices. The beginning and the end of the year found the same prices ruling with little change during the twelve months. The lowest point for the year was reached in April when prices reached a level 40 cents below the highest point for the year. We refer to Manitoba flours. Prices are on a Toronto basis

Flour Prices in 1910.

In 1910 the changes were more numerous and the range between the high and low point for the year much wider. In that year starting with $5.30 in January, prices with some slight waverings at times kept on the upward trend until $6.20 was reached in July. Then followed a falling off.

In 1909 the high point was reached during the summer before the harvest had commenced and when adverse crop reports exerted an influence on the market.

While in 1910 the highest point reached by rolled oats was $2.45, this year prices went to $2.60, which however was not as high as the point reached in 1909 when $2.90 in May was the high figure.

A tower design can be easily made of cereal goods. This used as centrepiece for the accompanying suggestion will look attractive.

Last year starting at $2.05 in March, prices kept gradually on the ascent until $2.60 was reached on Sept. 15. The market remains unchanged until early in December when a 13½ cent. decline was announced, followed a week or so later by a 17½ cent drop. Rolled wheat has not changed much during the year.

Employ Good Selling Methods.

While the market movements hold considerable interest for the retailer of flour and cereals, he is also deeply concerned in methods to bring him increased trade. The present is conceded to be a most favorable period for sale of these goods but it must be remembered that because time and weather are favorable, it is absolutely no guarantee that the retailer will receive a big demand. It depends largely on himself and the efforts he puts forward, but the dealer who goes about it in the proper manner at the present time will find excellent results.

How shall the grocer proceed in his endeavor to increase his flour sales? It is taken for granted that he has in his selection of flour secured a brand or brands that will satisfy the particular housewife, that he knows the good points and has confidence in them. It then remains to acquaint the public with these facts.

It requires good strong copy written with the idea of creating interest in the brand or brands the dealer knows he can recommend. He should point out the features that will appeal to the housewife—that more and better bread can be made than from inferior brands, etc.

Use the Power of the Window.

Window display may be turned to good advantage in creating interest in flour, cereals, etc. Show cards pointing out the good qualities are beneficial. Use your own salesmanship. If your customers have the confidence in you they should, you will be able to sell.

The present cold weather will assist materially the dealer who now gives prominence to cereals. Here, freshness of stock should be made the key-note of selling arguments. The fact that attractive displays may be made of cereals makes it plain why a window trim is valuable in creating sales. Some design that will attract attention can easily be made. First, interest will be centered in the design, and then in the article with which it is constructed.

Business Management—Taking Discounts

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

Having taken stock, Mr. Merchant, and closed your books, and drawn up your balance sheet, it is up to you, as a business man, to ponder well the results of the year's trading. Perhaps the net gain shows up fairly well, according to your view, and the various features of the enterprise—stock on hand, accounts receivable and payable, class of patronage, store department, and many other things—show marked improvement over the previous year.

Your standing in the community has, perhaps, been materially enhanced, your slate wiped clean at the bank, and further good conduct marks earned from Dun's and Bradstreet's. But have you done as well as you might have done? Have you realized, for instance, the importance of taking discounts on all purchases, and the power of the financial lever that this rule would give you over your competitors?

The Purpose of the Bank.

You reply, perhaps, that it cannot be done, because your capital is inadequate, but what are banks for? They are established for the purpose of lending money. They want to lend money to good clients, to be employed in good business, and the merchant is in fine shape who acknowledges no creditor, but his banker. But, you say, interest must be paid to the banker. Of course it must. That's what he lends money for. He receives money on deposit, paying 3 per cent., perhaps, for it, and he lends it to you at 6 per cent. That's where the business comes in. Banks would have to go out of business if people ceased to borrow.

Where the Merchant Gains.

Now then, if you, by discounting your bills, receive more than you pay your banker for supplying the funds, you are ahead that much, are you not? You will be surprised how it figures out.

Besides the extra profit you will make through discounts, think of the boost given your credit in the manufacturing and jobbing world—"prompt pay," "discounts his bills"— and other such favorable comments will be passed around among wholesalers, and Bradstreets will probably be compelled to concede you a first class rating.

Watching Collections Closely.

There is another important feature that must not be overlooked. It has naturally followed that in discounting your bills, you have borrowed as little as possible from your banker. In other words, you have gone after your own collections with renewed vim and energy. You have gradually increased your cash business, and your credit customers have been taught to realize that their accounts must be paid in 30 days. They know you need the money to pay your bills, and that by helping you, they are helping themselves in securing improved service and better goods, at a possibly lower price than before.

Next week the writer will lay before you, two concrete cases, which will illustrate in figures the wonderful advantage of the discounter over the time man.

Shorten Credit and Cut Out Discounts

Forty-two Ontario Wholesale Grocers Sign Agreement—All Goods Invoiced at Net Cash Thirty Days with Exception of Tea, Vinegar and Sugar—Interest on Overdue Accounts.

Forty-two wholesale grocery firms in Ontario have, beginning this year, signed an agreement regarding the discontinuance of discounts on all articles excepting tea, sugar and vinegar. The agreement also stipulates that interest at 7 per cent. per annum will be charged on all accounts accrued after the beginning of 1912 and not paid within 30 days.

The same firms further agree that they will strictly observe manufacturers' fixed prices and terms on proprietary articles.

The entire memo covering the terms of agreement is as follows:

We, the undersigned wholesale grocers, being anxious to have uniformity of terms, and knowing how difficult it is to bring about same without some proper understanding with our competitors, hereby agree as follows:

That all goods sold by us, with the exception of tea, vinegar and sugar, will be sold and invoiced net cash, payable within thirty days from date of invoice, and that in settlement of such invoice no discount of any kind will be allowed.

It is agreed, however, that on any invoices paid before due date, interest (not discount) at the rate of not more than eight per cent. per annum may be allowed for the unexpired time. It is also agreed that except on secured accounts, and on accounts upon which advances have been made previous to the signing of this agreement, that not less than seven per cent. interest per annum shall be charged on overdue accounts and for extra time over thirty days.

We also agree that we will strictly observe manufacturers' prices and terms wherever such prices and terms are established by the manufacturer on any proprietary lines.

It is understood that in cases where it is necessary to meet competition on any lines of goods upon which there is no fixed selling price or terms, that we shall have the right to allow a trade discount, which trade discount shall be shown on the face of the invoice, and deducted from each line in respect of which such discount is allowed.

We agree also that we will give positive instructions to our travelers, and all those in our employ accepting payment of accounts, that no discount of any kind shall be allowed from the face value of the invoice or statement.

How Wholesalers Are Distributed.

As pointed out above, 42 firms have signed this. They include 12 in Toronto, 5 in Hamilton, 2 each in Brantford, St. Catharines and Owen Sound, 6 in London, 3 in Collingwood, and one each in Sarnia, Guelph, Windsor, Berlin, Stratford, North Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur and Fort William.

The wholesalers point out this was decided upon at the last meeting of the Ontario Guild, and that it is being enforced now.

Grocers Enumerate Instances of Theft

At Association Meeting Tell How Wholesale Delivery Men Attempt to Cheat Them—Caught in the Act—Short Bread, Butter and Potatoes—New Officers Elected—Legislation Committee Named—Banquet to be Held.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—(Special.)—If the first 1912 meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association can be taken as a gauge of what is to follow during next eleven months some good things can be expected from this association before another year has passed into history.

Much enthusiasm was displayed and the attendance was a record one, so large indeed that the securing of a larger hall for their meetings was deemed necessary and a committee was appointed to look after the matter. An important feature was the forcible manner in which it was pointed out by actual instances that it behooves every merchant to see that he gets all he pays for.

Officers for 1912.

It was election night and after the regular routine work had been cared for, the selection of officers for the ensuing year was made. Here is the list of those who will guide the association work during the year :—

President.—R. W. Davies (acc.)
Vice-President.—D. W. Clark.
Rec. Secretary.—C. F. Thorne (acc.)
Treasurer.—J. S. Bond (acc.)
Executive.—D. McLean, D. Bell, C. Fry and R. Mathews.
Trustees.—D. W. Clark, D. Bell and F. Johnston (acc.)
Auditors.—N. Carmichael, C. Fry.

Then followed the installation of above officers by Past President, Wm. C. Miller, who in stepping down from the presidential chair to give way to his worthy successor, made quite a flowery speech. He pointed out the progress which the association had made during past year, its membership showing big increase while many questions of importance to the retail trade had been dealt with. He predicted even greater things for the association during coming year.

The members-elect in turn pledged themselves to serve faithfully the association during their term of office. They all looked forward confidently to good year and believed that by proper co-operation the position of the grocery trade could be materially improved.

Will Watch Retail Legislation.

On motion of F. Johnston and R. Mathews it was decided to appoint a Legislative Committee to look after the association's interests during the year. This committee is composed of Messrs. Carmichael, Hall, Bone, Kennedy, Dutton, Duke, Miller and Snider. It will be their duty to watch all legislation coming before civic, provincial and federal bodies which may have any effect on the retailers' interests and see that their rights are carefully observed; also to secure such legislation from these bodies as is deemed necessary to protect and improve the grocery trade.

To See About Peddlers' Licenses.

The peddler nuisance will likely be a subject to claim first attention.

It was pointed out by F. Johnston that the new licenses to peddlers had not yet been issued and that now was the time to interview the city council in regard to the matter. D. W. Clark had a strong protest to make against the hucksters calling out their wares on the street. The grocer's customers without considering quality got the idea that they were being over charged and became dissatisfied.

R. W. DAVIES, Homewood Ave.
Elected to the Presidency of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association.

Weight of Bag of Potatoes.

In regard to petition sent to the Dominion government that the standard weight of potatoes be set at 75 pounds, a communication was received from the Trade and Commerce department that a weight of 80 pounds had already been recommended to the government, being endorsed by the Ontario and Quebec Vegetable Growers' Associations as well as the Dominion Experimental Farm. This has been the standard weight in Quebec for some time and the Senate has recommended that it be extended to cover the whole Dominion. It has not as yet been passed on by the Commons.

Another question which F. Johnston had to bring before the association was wholesalers selling to consumers. W. C. Miller spoke of it as an important point and cited cases in which wholesalers were selling to boarding houses and even small householders. C. W. Duke had complaints to make in regard to consumers buying from wholesale fruit men, who in many instances seemed to recognize no limit. It was pointed out by D. W. Clark that attention be given to making the association so strong that they will be able to demand that their rights be observed by wholesalers.

Example of Wholesale Thefts.

All the members warmed up to the discussion on the advisability of the grocer keeping careful watch that he gets all the goods he pays for. Nearly all those present had instances to cite where thieving had been carried on to the loss of the grocer. D. W. Clark led off with an instance where a brother grocer had been overcharged in his invoice. After the goods were listed the amount set down as the price per pound was that at which the grocer had bought but when the totals were carried out it was found that a larger figure per pound had been charged.

Another instance was where a grocer had been paying for his bread each day without counting the amount left by the bread delivery man. He got wise to the scheme which the bread man was carrying on of short counting and recovered $25 from the baker.

Two Dozen Cakes Short.

Neil Carmichael had several cases where the grocers were being robbed by short count and weight and advocated that the dealer give a good deal of attention to goods received. He enquired of a brother grocer one day when he was on the road how many cakes he paid for and advised him to count them. While he had paid for 8 dozen, he had only received 6 dozen. That was just one day.

"I have known men delivering butter," he said, "to operate this scheme."

One side of your refrigerator is clear and you order him to place say 50 pounds in there. After he goes you find 50 pounds there all right but you do not know that several pounds have been transferred from the other side of the refrigerator to make it up."

Minus Bag of Potatoes.

"The main feature of a man in business is to see that he gets right weight," said another grocer. "We received recently what was supposed to be 25 bags of potatoes. When we put them over the scales, however, we found that they were 85 pounds short on the whole." This was a bag short.

"You want to watch your back door too," he continued. "One man I know

GET WHAT YOU PAY FOR

The grocer cannot be too careful in making sure he gets what he pays for.

This was brought out in its true light at the last regular meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association when different members enumerated instances where the dealer has lost money through short weight, count and measure on the part of the produce, wholesale and bread deliverers.

An instance of where a grocer was practically a bag short in the delivery of 25 bags of potatoes was given. Other cases showed merchants out 2 and 5 lbs. of butter in a fifty pound purchase; still another 2 dozen cakes short in a single purchase and one where a grocer was practically forced out of business on account of wholesale thieving.

These experiences serve to show the absolute necessity of every dealer counting, weighing or measuring everything he buys. There are sure to be times when he will save money, possibly not much at one time but a great deal during the year. This is a point The Canadian Grocer has repeatedly pursued and we are pleased to have this further opportunity of referring to the importance of such precautions.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

With an average temperature of 25 degrees below zero within the last three weeks, and with a maximum of over 50 degrees in different points of the west, the threshing of wheat has, of course, been delayed indefinitely, and the grain moving east is only composed of stocks which have been stored in interior elevators. These shipments continue to be heavy, however, and, in fact, not only are all the ordinary elevators filled to their outmost capacity at the head of the lakes, but the large C. P. R. elevator known as the "Hospitable Elevator," where damp or tough wheat is dried before storing, is also taxed to its utmost. The result is that arrangements regarding the shipping of wheat to Duluth have been hastily concluded, and Canadian grain is to be sent to Duluth to be stored in bond, if the Interstate Commission grants lower rates on freight charges from Winnipeg to Duluth.

The question at the present time which is puzzling the heads of the agriculture authorities is what shall be done with the grain that is still in the stook. Agriculture journals are devoting considerable space to the discussion of this matter, and information is being received from all quarters. That it is absolutely impossible to thresh grain now is recognized, but whether it is best to give up all idea of getting the grain eventually threshed or leaving it until after the spring work is over and then endeavoring to thresh it, is the question of the day, and it is expected that this will be dealt with at all of the forthcoming Grain Growers' conventions.

Owing to the action on the part of the people and the Government as well, the railroad officials have promised increased car service to the west, and already arrangements are under way to increase the size of the Winnipeg yards of the C. P. R. An expert has arrived in that city from Chicago and is now planning an extension which will in future include yards of such a size that a repetition of the serious congestion as occurred this winter will not take place.

GET AFTER TRANSIENT TRADER.

Merchants of Edmonton, Alta., are strenuously objecting to transient traders arriving in busy seasons, and with little expense and small license fees, departing "in the night" with the cream of the trade.

There are so many short sighted city councils in existence that municipalities are suffering in all parts of Canada with the transient trader evil. As will be seen from an article on another page of this issue, the Edmonton merchants show that transient traders suddenly appear in the city when there is the greatest possible opportunities for selling their particular lines, skim off the best of the trade and depart suddenly as soon as their season is over with the people's money.

If this money were spent among permanent merchants and kept at home, where it would do some useful building for the benefit of the city, the municipality would undoubtedly reap greater advantages.

It is, therefore, a short-sighted policy on the part of city councils to encourage with small fees transient traders to come into the city.

The merchants, at considerable expense, are permanent assets and help build up the municipality. The transient trader, on the other hand, helps pull it down.

A GOOD FISH TO SELL.

The grocer has good reason for recommending sardines to his customers, because they are a healthful food. The sardine supplies an excellent proportion of nitrogenous material, so it becomes a real and economical food.

Besides, the sardine has appetising qualities, and where the appetite serves, digestion follows. Its preservation in the cooked state in oil precludes contamination, even though it comes to us in the tin.

The us of sardines also brings the use of oil which is very commonly excluded without good reason from the diet nowadays. The oil in which the sardine is packed is both a curative and preventative of ills.

Hamilton grocers are opposed to the present system of Government scale inspection. At the last meeting of their association it was shown that Government inspectors ordered grocers to have alterations made to scales and measures for which they (the grocers) had to pay. The meeting was of the opinion that this is unfair, and think the Government should bear the expense. If all dealers get after their members of Parliament, pointing out the injustice, it should soon be remedied.

GROCERS ENUMERATE INSTANCES OF THEFT.

when putting in ice for a grocer relieved him of two bags of sugar when leaving the yard on one trip."

"I had an instance," remarked another dealer, "where I thought I was not getting my dues in butter. By keeping count I found that the man when placing the goods in the refrigerator, used a couple of pounds of that already there to make up the amount."

An instance in which a grocer practically drove himself out of business by not seeing that he got his weight in butter was given by D. W. Clark. It was brought in by a farmer each week who was able to short weight him by a huge amount. The grocer knew there was a leak somewhere but could not ferret it out. He thought his clerks must be dishonest and they were discharged. He placed his wife on the watch too. At last he found out how he was being robbed. He is now out of business.

It was decided to hold another banquet and executive was instructed to make plans for the event.

R. W. Davies, D. W. Clark and Wm. C. Miller were appointed to make inquiries regarding a larger hall for the association's meetings.

Organizer F. Johnston submitted the following grocers for membership: J. L. Davy, J. P. Hunter, F. A. Raden, C. Schlemmer, and O. Cuthbertson, Dundas Street; W. J. Coults, Parliament St.; F. H. Canadian Grocery News Done Up in Brief

Quaker Oats Co. to Build in the West—Geo. Weston's, Ltd., Open Office in Saskatoon—Date of Dominion Guild Annual—Hamilton Vinegar Plant Burned.

Montreal.

John Mitchell, Montreal, has been appointed European manager of the National Cash Register. Before leaving he was tendered a dinner by some thirty-five Montrealers, and presented with a sheet of parchment containing an illuminated address.

Ontario.

The annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild has been set by President Hugh Blain for Feb. 12, 13 and 14. This year it will be held in Toronto.

Tees & Persse, Western wholesale grocers, and Wm. Davies Co., pork packers, have opened offices in the old Dominion Bank Building in Fort William, Ont.

The plant and building of the Dominion Vinegar Works, Hamilton, Ont., were destroyed in a fire last Saturday. The loss is estimated at about $20,000, partly covered by insurance. F. H. Yapp the proprietor, stated the plant would likely be rebuilt. At present time the old customs house is being used as offices.

"The Trusweve Co., who have for a number of years carried on business in South Norwalk, Connecticut, have given up business, and the plant in Water St., South Norwalk, is being dismantled and the contents sold. This concern was the manufacturing end of the Sealshipt Oyster System." This item appeared in a Canadian newspaper recently. In reference to it, H. S. Tolchard, representing the Sealshipt Oyster System in Toronto, states it refers to the plant at South Norwalk, Conn., in which this company built their cases, etc., for shipping oysters. As they now have all these they require and since they are gradually working to the sale of oysters in small receptacles, Mr. Tolchard states they do not need this plant. Their head offices are in Boston and shipping is done from their oyster farms.

J. A. Edgar, Forest, Ont., recently had on exhibition in his store window a home-grown lemon, weighing one and one half pounds. It was grown by Wm. Jennings, Forest, who brought the tree from the south two years ago.

Western Canada.

Geo. Adams, a former New Westminster, B.C. grocer, is an aldermanic candidate in that city.

The Quaker Oats Co. will erect a large cereal and flour mill in the Canadian West. The situation, although not definitely decided on, will be somewhere between Winnipeg and Rocky Mountains It will be built with a view of caring for the Western and export trade. Building operations will be begun in the spring.

A report from Saskatoon, Sask., states that C. J. Bodley, manager of Geo. Weston, Ltd., biscuit manufacturers, Toronto, is there on a business trip opening up a branch from which to attend to business in that district. Branches have now been established in Winnipeg, Brandon, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary and Saskatoon, and before Mr. Bodley returns a branch will likely be opened in Vancouver. B. A. Tedford is the Saskatoon manager.

60% OF CANNED TOMATOES.

Wholesalers Ask Canners for This Delivery—Selling Method for 1912.

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 18.—Last week a number of wholesale grocers held a conference here with the Dominion Canners, Limited, regarding matter of interest to the trade. The wholesalers present were:—Armand Chaput, Chaput, Fils & Cie.; Z. Hebert, Hudon, Hebert & Cie.; J. Ethier, Laporte, Martin & Cie., of Montreal; Thos. Kinnear; A. H. Pafford, Davidson & Hay; John Ince, Perkins, Ince Co.; Frank Sloan, Jno. Sloan & Co.; F. W. Humphrey and W. P. Eby, Eby, Blain, Ltd., Toronto; and H. C. Beckett, W. H. Gillard & Co.; F. T. Smye and St. S. Balfour, of Balfour, Smye & Co., Hamilton.

The question of the amount of delivery of canned tomatoes was discussed. This year the trade received only 40 per cent. of orders on account of the short pack, and wholesalers wanted the canners to guarantee 60 or more per cent. This, however, was shown to be somewhat speculative, as the canners had no means of determining beforehand whether pack would be nearly sufficient to meet that percentage of 1912 orders. The only thing that could be done, therefore, was that the canners deliver 60 per cent., based on wholesale orders of 1911.

A discussion also took place as to whether open prices should prevail during 1912, but with some smaller changes it was practically agreed that the method of 1911—fixed opening prices on early orders from wholesaler to retailer—should prevail again this year.

Wholesalers pointed out that this year large quantities of canned tomatoes have been imported from the United States on account of the Canadian shortage. Another evidence of the short pack is the fact that in 1908 the Dominion Canners, with 15 factories less, packed more tomatoes than in 1911. The canners are this year spending half a million in new factories and remodeling others to try to secure sufficient packs.

Montreal, Jan. 18.—Stock taking time among jobbers is only a week away, and in addition to the regular sales there is an attempt to dispose of odds and ends before the actual work is begun. The past year was brightened by a fine business record reported in all sides and up to the present time the new year is doing well in a seeming effort to surpass that which has just been accomplished. This is usually a rather quiet time and while it is not causing nervous prostration among the trade at present it is very much better than was anticipated. Demand from the country is good for the season and it is hoped it will continue in the effort it has set out to accomplish during the present year.

The market has not been featured by any special flights. Sugar is going down steadily, common teas remain firm and high in price, prunes have gone up and the whole dried fruit market is worth following. Recent snows may make difficult traveling on the country roads, but on the whole the country trade has been quite satisfactory.

SUGAR.—Sugar market showed another decline on Thursday and is now on the basis of $5.45. The continued declines have been of almost unbroken regularity and it is likely there will be still further action before a halt is called. Sales are quite moderate and general tendency is to buy from hand to mouth, and this will naturally continue until market settles down and rights itself.

DRIED FRUITS.—There is but little new in dried fruit market for week. The movement in prunes mentioned last week has been carried out just as intimated and all down the line there is strength in this market. Currants are steady and are holding their own. It has been estimated there is apparent shortage of 11,000 tons of currants. This is of course only an estimate based on the usual requirements in currants.

NUTS.—Price of shelled walnuts is down to 29-31 cents after holding around holiday figure for some time. Drop is the result of arrival of goods bought for delivery now and therefore at a much lower price than the preholiday quotations. It is just possible these Bordeaux halves might be sold at slightly lower figures. There is fairly good sale of nuts these days, thanks to the numerous social affairs to a large extent. TEAS.—The high prices of lower grade teas have made it impossible for packers using lead packages to put a tea on the market at the old familiar sum of 25 cents. Gradually they are being withdrawn or as in most cases the price is advanced to 30 cents, The demand for low grade teas has been extremely heavy and in this as in many market conditions indicate that the consumption is catching up with production if it has not already done so. There is firmness throughout the entire market with but little happening.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—The first half of first month cannot be said to have been brisk. However that was not looked for. January is generally a quiet month, and this year has not been any more so than usual. In fact, considering the cold weather and snow storms in many sections, the year is regarded as having opened up fairly well.

Canned goods have lost little of their steadiness, but it is remarked that demand is rather quiet. In the United States, tomatoes are held strongly at $1.20 per dozen as against 85 cents early in the fall. The imports of United States tomatoes to Canada this year have been large. One wholesale firm alone imported 27,000 cases.

SUGAR—Another 10 cent decline on Thursday of last week brought local quotations down to $5.55. Where does sugar stand now? That is the question. It is being turned over in minds of refiners, wholesalers and retailers. Majority of wholesalers are looking for continuance of downward trend. That is shown by fact that they are operating on hand-to-mouth basis. There are sugar men, however, who suggest it may be probable sugar has reached its low level for present. While agreeing that the price is still high, they point to actual shortage of sugar in the world which it will take some time to make up.

There is somewhat of a new feature arisen. Raw market in Europe has shown advances, and on strength of these advances, New York refiners are said to be buying raws. "If that is the case," said one sugar man, "there may be reason to believe we may be at the bottom point. My opinion is that we will be lucky to see any further easing, and more probable according to present lay of market cards to see steady and firming market." Such is the opinion of one sugar man. He is not the only one inclined that way either, but others have different opinions.

DRIED FRUITS.—There are no particularly new features in dried fruits this week. Prunes are regarded by local dealers as holding quite strong position. There seems to be no overplus of supplies carried by local jobbers. Enquiries on this market for prunes have been made by Chicago brokers recently denoting the situation there.

Currants in primary market are firm, a late advice noting them up six pence.

Evaporated apples under considerable export enquiry are shaping to even greater firmness. One firm quotes ¾ cents above previous level.

BEANS.—Prices are firmer and higher. Majority of quotations rule around $2.40 for prime, and some jobbers are asking even above that figure. Heavy sales were made by farmers in fall induced by high prices and amount remaining is reported small. Mining and lumbering camps are big consumers of this line.

Lima Beans.—Prices on California Lima beans have been firming and are quoted higher by local wholesalers, ruling around 8 cents.

CANNED GOODS.

MONTREAL.—String beans, wax and green, are selling at $1.35. Canadian stocks with most houses were exhausted some time ago, and U. S. goods had to be brought in to meet demand. Whether it is general fact or not, there is feeling that the consumption of canned goods has not been as heavy as is usually the case. Prevailing high prices are given as reason for this condition. Peas and other lines would have been much more reduced with lower prices. The same might be said of blueberries, strawberries and other fruits of which there was a comparatively short pack. The present demand for canned goods is steady, and a fairly large trade is passing.

TORONTO.—Canned lobsters are higher and are being quoted at $3 per dozen for halves. Stocks are small and there are those who predict a clean-up in early spring the same as last year. Quarters are practically a nil quantity.

Soups are also practically cleaned up. It will be remembered that delivery was small, being only 18 per cent of 1's, and 26 per cent. of 2's. Any jobbers who have any stock to offer are asking higher than opening prices. Potted poultry showed a 75 per cent. delivery and has not moved from the opening figure.

MANITOBA MARKETS.

POINTERS:—

Sugar.—Decline 10 cents.

Prunes.—Firm.

Eva. Apples.—Advancing.

Coffee.—Steady.

Winnipeg, Jan. 18.—The intense cold weather during last week, following as it did, two weeks of 30 below zero weather, has assisted very materially in delaying all trains, and has handicapped to considerable extent shipment of goods. Travelers are all on the road, however, and orders for sorting and spring shipments are beginning to arrive in large quantities. Mail orders have also been fairly steady this week and wholesalers have been kept actively at work. Stock taking will be started in grocery houses in another two weeks, and arrangements are already being made for placing of business in such a shape that this important part of the year's work can be gone through as hurriedly as possible.

A feature of the trade this week was a decline of 10 cents per cwt. in sugar. This makes a total decline of 30 cents since November 25, and shows that the market is still in weak condition. Evaporated apples have shown considerable life and a slight advance will be noticed over last week.

In dried fruits, however, the eyes of the trade are watching with interest the California market. A report from a large dealer in Chicago to a local firm this week on this situation was as follows:—"It has been a great many years since the statistical statement on California dried fruits was as strong as it is right now, or when stocks in hands of jobbers were as light as they are at present. We are now entering upon the actual dried fruit consuming period, and with every outlook for a very large business before us. Of prunes, it is reliably reported that there are less than 15,000,000 lbs. left in entire State out of a crop estimated at 175,000,000 pounds, and with over 4,000 jobbers to supply for the next month."

The same firm who received this report also received an inquiry from a Chicago house asking for prices and quantities for sale of 50's and 25's prunes in this city. They were willing to buy and take back to Chicago. This established a new order of things.

SUGAR.—A decline of 10c is noticed in sugar this week, which makes a total decline of 30c within last six weeks. The market at present time is still weak, and while orders have not been heavy within last two weeks, it is expectd that this dcline will result in bringing a larger volume of business.

EVAPORATED APPLES.—As was expected, evaporated apple market took advance of ½c per pound over that quoted last week, owing to strength of eastern markets. This advance is regarded by many as being former of steadily rising market for rest of winter. Prices quoted at present time are 10½c flat, Winnipeg.

NUTS.—In spits of fact that holiday season is over, there is still fair demand for nuts of all varieties, and wholesalers expect to be rid of practically all their stock this year. Prices are unchanged from last week, and are as follows:—

Brazil Nuts	0 18	Pecan Choice	0 17

DRIED FRUITS.—As stated above, dried fruit situation is going to be a precarious one before new stocks are received, and as far as prunes are concerned, market is expected to be bare of this line long before new crop will be ready to be picked. This will naturally mean considerably higher prices, and an advance is being looked for daily. No change has, however, taken place on local market since advance of last week, and quotations may be seen below. Valencia raisins and figs have also been in good demand, but no advances have been noted yet.

SENT IN FICTITIOUS ORDERS.

Wholesalers, manufacturers and their representatives often have to deal with cases of misrepresentation on the part of salesmen which are difficult to head off in any way. A recent case occurred in Toronto which the wholesale trade feel should be given publicity, as similar cases are not infrequent. Thos. Loney was employed as a salesman in the early part of the winter with F. E. Robson & Co., Front Street East, Toronto. Several orders were turned in from Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, Woodstock, etc., but when the company began to fill them they discovered the orders had not been given and that the supposed salesman was sending in fictitious accounts of sales. At the same time he was drawing salary and expenses and causing loss and inconvenience to F. E. Robson & Co. The man was arrested, and after considerable litigation, changing of courts, etc., pleaded guilty. On making restitution he was allowed to go on suspended sentence. It is to be hoped this sort of thing will be eliminated altogether, as it tends to affect adversely our staple business conditions.

Hamilton, Ont., Board of Trade is considering the formation of a retail merchants' section. The purpose would be to boom Hamilton with a view to having all possible money spent there. President H. L. Frost, of the board, stated it was conservatively estimated that about one-half million dollars left Hamilton annually that should be spent there.

An authentic report from Edmonton, Alta., states that the plant operated by the Calgary Milling Co., has been purchased by the Robin Hood Flour Mills.

Tenders are invited for the purchase of the following property belonging to the estate of John Walsh at St. Mary's, Ont.

1. The stock of groceries, etc., and shop fixtures, with the good-will of the business.
2. Furniture, billiard-table and library in private rooms over the store.
3. Contents of stable.

The grocery business is of long standing and enjoys a large trade in St. Mary's and vicinity. The value of the stock is approximately $3,000 and of the fixtures, $650.

The business is carried on in premises leased from Miss Hutton, St. Mary's. All the above mentioned property can be seen on application at the store in St. Mary's. Tenders for the stock-in-trade will be at a price on the Dollar of invoice price and on the fixtures a lump sum, both to be included in the one tender. Separate tenders are desired for parcels 2 and 3, of a lump sum in each case.

Tenders will be received until 1st February, 1912, at 10 A.M. A marked cheque for $200 must accompany each tender for parcel 1, cheques to be made payable to Joseph Walsh. The cheques of all but the successful tenderers will be returned forthwith after acceptance of any tender, and in his case will stand as security for completion of purchase and be forfeited on failure to complete. Balance of purchase price to be paid on completion of stock-taking when possession will be given.

For parcels 2 and 3 payment must be made on acceptance of tenders. The highest or any other tender not necessarily accepted.

HEINZ

This name stands for all that is best in Pickles, Sauces, Baked Beans, Relishes, Catsups, Soups and Preserves, in fact, fifty-seven varieties of the very finest eatables that it is possible to produce. The Heinz kitchens at Leamington, Ontario, are models of cleanliness, and they put out a standing invitation to everybody to call and go through their main plant at Pittsburg, and all the branch factories, whenever people can make it convenient to do so, and a staff of guides is kept always on hand to pilot visitors through the works. Now think this over and at the same time bear in mind that most manufacturers of food products try to keep strangers as far away from their operations as possible, you can then make your own conclusion as to what this all means. Your store must have a better standing with your customers if you have a lot of Heinz goods stacked around, because they know that these goods always stand for quality and it will well pay you, indirectly as well as directly, to show where you stand when it comes to goods that solicit the limelight when in the process of manufacture.

Prepare for Spring Wall Paper Trade

General Merchant Should Begin Early to Head Off Mail Order House Business—Plenty of Trade Passing in Spring of Year—Hints in Buying and Selling.

General merchants throughout Canada should soon be making preparations for boosting their wall paper department.

Wall paper will be wanted towards the end of next month and during March, April and May, and either the general merchants will get the business in their own communities or the mail order houses will. If the merchant gets it, it will require aggressive selling methods, a good display and a good assortment.

In the past mail order houses have been securing more than their share from county districts and they will do their best to follow up this advantage. It remains for the general merchant to stop these inroads into his trade. That he can do it has been proven time after time by those who have set out with a clear purpose and a definite policy.

Afraid of Opposition.

Their policy was not like that of a dealer who last week sent a letter to a wall paper manufacturer which read something like this. "Please cut my order down half this year as we find we are going to have opposition in the town."

Such a letter denotes the unprogressive, listless merchant who waits for demand and who would consider it too much of an effort to create sales. What he should have done was to increase his order and assortment, and use some energy to hold his trade and get new custom by comparison. The trouble seems to be that some dealers do not realize their power to make sales. The use of a little advertising, display, up-to-date assortment, backed up by strong selling talks from information received from manufacturers, make a combination that is bound to produce sales and to eliminate a great deal of the catalogue house business.

Good Prospects for Future.

One does not have to go far afield to discover that there is good business to be had in wall paper. The country is prospering at a rapid rate and with the enormous annual influx of population this means the erection of thousands of new homes every year. People are gradually taking more and more interest in the appearance of their homes and using higher grade paper.

This fact being self-evident the first problem is to get the people into the store to look at the assortment. This is absolutely necessary. It is more important to get those who are not already customers. It is the customer of a competitor in whom you are most interested.

To do this, advertising in its various phases must be done. Many businesses have of course been successful without advertising chiefly because of lack of competition. But if an agressive competitor believing in his power to take away customers from others becomes active, there will soon be a change. This has been proved so emphatically so often it needs no further demonstration.

Therefore to get at the prospective wall paper customer reach him by advertising. Tell him something of interest to himself and not yourself; shown him that you have a personal interest in his welfare and sooner or later he will buy something from you. Honest and fair dealings and adequate service are only needed after that.

Carry High-Grade Stocks.

Every merchant who handles wall paper should undoubtedly stock high grade qualities. Of course some cheaper grades are necessary but these should not be concentrated upon nor featured either in display or selling talk. A wall paper purchaser in many cases can easily be persuaded to purchase the better paper even if the price at first appears to be a drawback. Show by comparison how much better it will look and wear, and as wall paper is a house furnishing standing up for everybody's inspection, it should be good.

A talk like this has hundreds of times proved successful. It not only raises the standard of goods sold but the customer is going to be better satisfied and will in future consider any recommendation of yours seriously.

This is business building and no sale can be made at a profit which does not help to build up the business.

Must Study the Goods.

The retail wall paper salesman must know his stock and be able to talk intelligently on every design. This information must be secured in some way from the manufacturer who has made a scientific study of wall paper. The variety of patterns and colorings carried in stock by most general dealers are enough sometimes to mystify even an experienced buyer if all are displayed in front of him. With any lack of decision in his general character he will be absolutely at sea unless the salesman can mould his opinion and direct his choice. This requires a complete study of the patterns, some knowledge of the customer and her ability to pay for goods bought and the peculiar knack of the good salesman who can close a deal in a reasonable time and with the greatest benefit to the store.

In future articles other phases of wall paper buying, displaying and selling will be taken up. It is again urged here that the merchant make early preparations to sell more wall paper than in the past. It can be done with some extra effort and it means an increase in business and good profits.

DOMINION CANNERS' NEW FACTORIES.

Plants to be Remodeled—Half a Million Expenditures.

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 18—(Special)—The Dominion Canners have definitely announced to The Grocer that they will erect new factories at Ridgetown, Forest and Fonthill this year. They are also making large extensions to plants at Jordan, Simcoe, Aylmer and Hamilton.

They will in addition to this remodel and run one or two factories that have not been operated for a year or so. They have also other factories under contemplation, but plans are not sufficiently advanced to make any definite announcement at present.

The company is expending upwards of half a million dollars in new plants and improvements to old ones.

LEAVES MOLASSES FOR FINANCE.

Percy T. Strong, sales manager of the Dominion Molasses Co., Ltd., Halifax, was in Toronto last week on his last trip for his old firm. On his return to Halifax, Mr. Strong enters the well-known Halifax financial house of F. B. McCurdy & Co. When Mr. Strong says it is 25 years since he entered the grocery business you believe him, but he hardly looks it. Yet such is the case—16 years with Bauld Bros., of Halifax, and 7 years with his present firm, the Dominion Molasses Co., the last three years as sales manager. It was in the latter capacity that Mr. Strong recently put on the Domolco campaign at the success of which he is very much pleased. The campaign was began the first of November, the two-color page advertisement in the Fall Number of The Grocer being one of the first guns. On his return to Halifax, early in December, after a trip through to the west, Mr. Strong found the firm 37 cars behind in their shipments. Mr. Strong credits The Grocer with an important part in the success of this campaign.

Through the mistake of the person handling the copy, an advertisement of The Quaker Oats Co., intended for and applying to the United States was sent to and published in The Canadian Grocer. This week a correction is made in the Quaker Oats Company's advertisement, and their Canadian proposition explained.

The Way to More Profit on TEA

THE easiest possible way for you to make more profit out of your tea business this year than you did last, is for you to ask your customers to try a package of 40c. Red Rose Tea. We think we can guarantee that at least two out of three of those who try it will order again. They will order it because they will like it better than cheaper teas and because if they use it carefully they will find it will spend farther. They will find it really worth the small difference in price.

If you will use a package first and convince yourself that what we state is a fact you will succeed better with your customers. Worth a good deal to be able to say—"I know it is worth the difference in price because I have tried it."

WHERE MONEY IS LOST.

Considerable money is lost by many grocers during the winter months by frost damage to fruit, especially bananas. This fruit being grown in a warm climate will not stand the cold temperature that fruits of more northern climes will. Sixty degrees is perhaps the minimum temperature for bananas, while a good ripening temperature is 70 to 75 degrees.

If there is the least chance of chill during the night the bunch of bananas should be enveloped in a large paper bag or the regular felt-lined banana bag.

Not only is there direct loss by frost, but chilled fruit is unsatisfactory to the consumer and brings loss indirectly.

Dairy Products Hold at High Level

Butter and Cheese Maintain Strong Position—Record Prices for Butter in United States—Cheese at Record Prices — Supplies as Against a Year Ago are Small—Storage Eggs in Rather Small Supply—Only Routine Trade in Honey.

Products of the farm are holding a strong position and included in this may be mentioned butter, eggs and cheese. The extremely cold weather that has been general may no doubt be held accountable in part for this. In butter the weather has by no means been such as to induce farmers to bring their supplies to market while the production of new laid eggs has been curtailed by zero temperature.

However, all this present steadiness is not due to the weather. The butter market has since early fall been shaping upward, while fact that stocks are light when compared with year ago is strengthening factor. Butter prices across the border are extremely high. The wholesale price in New York this week went to 42c a pound, the highest, it is said in 28 years, while retail prices in Chicago are reported as the highest in the city's market history. Some expect to see 60 cents there.

New laid eggs have come down from high perch held around Christmas but storage stocks continue strong. Supplies put away last summer by many firms were rather small and a good demand to date has made a big cut in stocks. Many firms have for some time found it necessary to make imports from United States markets and they are still coming forward. Duty on eggs coming across the line is three cents per dozen.

Cheese is at record price and continues to firm, some further advances at some points being noted this week. Prices have been firming since early summer. The Old Country enquiry has been good of late and spot stocks at most points are pretty well sold up.

Hogs are if anything a little firmer. Pork products, however, show practically no change. The demand for poultry varies at different centres. There is only a routine trade in honey.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—Live and dressed hogs are, if anything, a little firmer. Prices otherwise show no change. Lard is steady and is being sold freely, as is also barrelled pork. Business is reported improving in this department considered as a whole. Hams are inclined to be quiet.

BUTTER.—Indications are more apparent that there is going to be a shortage, or at least a "near shortage" of butter between now and the time that spring breaks. Specials sold at 41c a few days ago in New York, and buyers from across the line have recently been in this market, and did not go home empty-handed. Higher quotations this week indicate the tendency in the market. There is almost four months to elapse before butter of real quality is received on the market.

There is some demand from the west, and the recent cold weather seems to have put new life into the market here. At any rate, the market is much firmer, and the light stocks held at present are alone a sufficient reason to look for continued strength. Higher prices are not at all unlikely.

Creamery	0 33 0 33½
Dairy, tubs, lb	0 25 0 28

CHEESE.—The cheese market continues firm. Supplies are not heavy, and have been decreasing steadily. Enquiry for export has also been encouraging, and a steady demand locally is another factor. The market is regarded as strong and should continue so for a considerable time yet.

EGGS.—Supplies of eggs are becoming light, and the price of selects shows an advance over last week's quotations. There is a good demand for new laids, but the supply is too limited to go around. There is a realization of the shortage of storage stocks, and at present no pronounced inclination to let go, as prices are firm at the new figure. U. S. eggs have been brought in, but they have not relieved the situation. In this respect the farmers of this country have apparently been overlooking a source of revenue. To be importing eggs instead of exporting is surely the reverse of what should be reported The exports during the year were practically a negligible quantity. Something should surely be done to awaken interest in this question.

PROVISIONS.—Most provision men see no change from week ago. That is as far as commodities are concerned. Trade has not been all it might have been. Some report marked quietness. Slack trade throughout the country on account of cold weather is partly held responsible. One redeeming feature is a good demand noted in some quarters from mining and lumber camps.

BUTTER.—Market is holding strong position. There are no price changes from week ago, but quotations are maintained. Deliveries are not heavy. The New Pittsburg Coal Co. adopts this ever-popular Account Register in all of their stores

THE KEITH SYSTEM DISPLACES OTHER SO-CALLED ACCOUNT REGISTERS AFTER FAIR AND IMPARTIAL TRIAL.

One-writing. Self-Indexing. Fire-Proof.

HERE ARE THE FACTS:

Mr. H. S. Mervin, Auditor of the New Pittsburg Coal Co., whose wide experience qualifies him as a competent judge of account systems, after having given a competing register a fair trial, came to this conclusion, viz., that to hunt a customer's name under a glass, find a number, locate a page, then to open the register and search out a small spring bearing a corresponding number, was a waste of valuable time for a corporation such as The New Pittsburg Coal Co.

THE KEITH SELF-INDEX SYSTEM is free from the above complications. Any number of salespeople may operate it at the same time if necessary.

Mr. Mervin saw its advantages.

Should Feature Flour and Cereals

Weather Favorable to the Cause, and Dealers Will Find Good Results from Pushing These Lines—Markts Little Changed in Past Week—United States Millers Anxious to Mill Canadian Wheat in Bond—Canadian Wheat Crop Set at 65,862,000 Bushels Above Previous Year.

The retailer who has been giving his salesmanship powers in promoting cereal trade this month is finding good results. The weather is lending able assistance and sales should be large. The possibilities in this as well as in sale of flour during next month or so, should not be forgotten.

Market conditions show little change from week ago. They have fully maintained their position. Flour cannot be described as brisk, but cereals have been moving well. Competition between mills on rolled oats is still marked feature.

United States millers say they are anxious to mill Canadian wheat in bond if it can be secured at right prices. Movement is on foot to reduce freight rates on grain from the Canadian Northwest to Minneapolis and Duluth. The tariffs have been filed at Washington and a hearing set for Feb. 10. The United States crop of spring wheat is reported as twenty million bushels below the estimated milling requirements in the north-western states.

A late report estimates that despite heavy crop damage Argentine will have an exportable surplus of 3,500,000 bushels larger than ever before. A final report on the Canadian wheat crop sets the total yield 65,862,000 greater than for the previous year. The United States visible wheat supply decreased last week, but the combined figures for Canada and the United States were 90,676,000 bushels as against 59,445,000 a year ago.

One milling man in summing up the Canadian Western crop situation says that the total quantity of wheat marketed to date exceeds 100,000,000 bushels. The bulk of what is now remaining in the country is low-grade. A large proportion of this, variously estimated at from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 bushels, is totally unfit for milling. From a milling standpoint, the grading of this year's crop has been most disappointing. Up to the 31st of December less than 4 per cent. of the total crop inspected No. 1 and not over 18 per cent. No. 2. As these percentages are based upon the deliveries which came largely from Manitoba, being the first to market, it will be found that from now on the percentage of high grades will show an even smaller proportion.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Flour is moving steadily, but there is little or no deviation from conditions that prevailed last week. No particular change is expected just now, as the market appears to be running smoothly in its present position.

FLOUR.—There is not more than a steady movement of flour. Some mills even report trade quiet. The market situation is practically the same as week ago. Wheat quotations remained unchanged on this market.

Ontario wheat has been pushing its way upward during the past couple of weeks, injecting firmness into the flour milled from it.

Cold Weather Drawback to Fruit Trade

Curtailed Shipments of Goods to Retailers—Many Orders on File Awaiting Milder Weather—Marmalade Oranges Arrive This Week—Expected to Rule About Same as Last Year—Cold Snap Strengthens Potato Values—More Interest in Spanish Onions—Stocks of Home Grown Light—Strawberries Make Their Debut.

The extremely cold weather that has been ruling throughout Canada for past couple of weeks has been serious drawback to trade in both fruits and vegetables, curtailing as it has the shipment of goods out to retail trade. Shipping has been so risky that in some cases only partial orders were sent out. Wholesalers have been holding orders waiting for the weather to moderate so as to make shipping safe. Save for the curtailment enforced by the weather, trade has been fairly good. Travelers are nearly all out on road again, and with more favorable weather business should again return to normal.

On account of cold weather, there has been no briskness in orange movement. The damage by frost in California is an indefinite quantity as yet. Doubtless, considerable fruit was damaged. As usual, the damage seems to be spotted—quite severe in some places, while orchards near by seem to have escaped. Thus, the difficulty in arriving at the exact damage.

Bitter or marmalade oranges will arrive on Canadian markets the latter part of this week or the first of next. The crop is rportd as being about same in quantity as last year, and prices will probably rule at about same level. The season lasts from month to six weeks. It does not hold on, but drops sharply off. Retailers should begin early in the season to get their customers interested in this fruit.

The cold snap is assisting to increase prices of potatoes at many centres. At several points cars are waiting on the tracks for warmer weather in order to unload. Under the reduced supplies of potatoes in the country, as compared with last year, situation is generally regarded as firm. One estimate of the actual quantity of potatoes in principal Eastern and Middle Western States on January 1 indicates a shortage of 80,000,000 bushels as compared with a year ago, which is a big deficiency. Of late, foreign potatoes have been coming into United States in large quantities despite big duty.

Increased interest is being shown in Spanish onions under general scarcity of Canadian grown stock.

Florida strawberries are making their appearance on Canadian markets at the usual fancy prices for this time of year. Malaga grapes, now approaching the end of their tether, are strengthening. Cranberries are high and scarce.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—Malaga grapes are approaching the end of the tether, and as stocks are steadily decreasing price is going up. Sales are, therefore, more limited. There is good passing trade in oranges with navels down to $3 and under. Only a light demand is felt for lemons. Apples are moving steadily, but in some cases prices are decidedly low. Annapolis Valley stocks that were not quite good enough for export have been selling cheaply here, principally because of fact they have not kept well. There is practically nothing of this market coming from the west and stocks of spies, fameuse, etc., are not at all heavy, according to report. Cranberries are away up in the air in price, and next to nothing is left in the city. The prices are quoted for what stocks would bring if they were offered. Altogether the market is running along smoothly in what might be called the "between seasons."

VEGETABLES.—Celery is scarce and much higher. The market is reported practically bare of stock. Potato situation is of special interest in a market that is otherwise rather quiet. The price of from $1.40 to $1.50 is being extended to about $1.60, and it is believed that the $2 mark will be reached before the season is over. Speculators in the Maritimes are, according to a jobber, holding back for higher prices, and even they are but lightly supplied. Boston lettuce is higher, and Canadian red onions are considerably firmer. The market is otherwise quiet, as there is only a limited enquiry for fancy imported goods.

tance below the duck egg mark, it was dangerous even to send shipments about the city, and they were sent out in small lots only in hopes of a moderation in the temperature. It made a great deal more work for the fruit men, as all goods had to be carefully wrapped before going out. First of week found large number of orders on file with wholesale men awaiting warmer weather before shipment.

Demand is fairly good if it were not curtailed by weather conditions. Weather man has hopes, however, of remedying this towards latter part of week.

Strawberries made their debut latter part of last week at 70 to 75 cents per box. They come from Florida, and are brought up in refrigerator cases, which keep them at proper temperature. Further shipments came in this week. Tangerines are quoted at $6 per strap. Bitter or marmalade oranges are expected to arrive the latter part of week. One dealer named $2.50 per case as possible figure at which they might sell.

VEGETABLES.— Extreme weather conditions had their effect on vegetables also. Some wholesale dealers refused to send out goods except at buyers' risk. For this reason retailers purchased in small quantities so as to just tide them over cold snap.

There is a stronger feeling in potatoes. Indeed, it is a quotable change, New Brunswick stock now ruling at $1.60 and Ontario at $1.40 to $1.50. The cold weather may be accountable in part for this. Farmers have not been able to get to town with any stock they had to offer. The feeling in New Brunswick is also stronger. A number of cars were on the track at the beginning of the week waiting for warmer weather to make unloading possible.

Greater interest has developed in Spanish onions of late. Stocks of home grown onions, as pointed out before, are extremely small. Celery is firmer as well as Boston head lettuce.

GREEN VEGETABLES.—The green vegetable market continues to advance with extremely cold weather. Wholesale grocers have been unable to unload many cars owing to danger of having supplies frozen. The native stuff is practically all off market and imported lines are taking their place. Advances in new prices will be noted as follows:—

FRESH FRUITS.—New prices will be noticed in many lines of fresh fruits, as weather has prevented unloading of cars, and many fruit men are pretty low in stocks. One large wholesaler stated he had had a car in the freight sheds of the railroad for the last two weeks, but he was afraid to have it shipped up to his warehouse because he knew if the car were unloaded in the 30 below zero weather, practically all of his fruit would be spoilt. The situation at the present time, while not serious, is still to some extent interesting, and while no great shortage is expected, a few days of mild weather would be much appreciated.

POTATOES.—It is in this line that cold spell is having a great effect in forcing up prices. Only those who have large stocks on hand are able to supply this line at the present time, as local growers have been unable to ship anything to the market, and as high as 85c bushel is now being asked. The situation is regarded as dangerous, although no serious effect has as yet been felt, but should the cold weather continue for another three or four weeks, it is likely that considerable higher prices will be seen, and that many in city will be forced to eat frozen potatoes.

Beneficial to Sales in All Lines—Frozen Fish Helped Materially—Fishing on East Coast Reduced to Minimum—Gives Firmness to Some Lines—Freeze Up of Bays Reduces Oyster Output—Chesapeake Bay Ice Bound For First Time in Fifty Years.

The year has opened up well in fish trade. The colder weather existing since turn of year was just what was needed to give impetus to trade. Frozen lines have been greatly benefited by the low temperature and have been quite active. Life has also been added to prepared and pickled varieties. No fault is being found with oyster movement.

Fishing on the Eastern coast has been curtailed to minimum, giving a firmer feeling to such lines as cod, haddock and haddies.

January trade, unlike that of December is gratifying so far at least to fish men and balance of the season is looked forward to with confidence.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—The market shows a number of changes for past week. Business is going along steadily and during past week or more has shown increased activity. B.C. salmon, whitefish and lake trout are all selling well and with halibut are quoted at favorable figures. These lines are quite active. Steak cod is slightly higher. The sales, too, of prepared salted and pickled fish are increasing. The frozen fish outlook is better than for some time past on account of extremely cold weather. Fishing on eastern coast has been reduced to about the minimum and it is question whether there will be any more for time being, particularly in the deep sea fishing. As the result of the weather and its effects on fishing the prices of haddock, cod, haddies, etc., are all firmer and higher. The seasonable fish weather of late has given the trade a certain confidence, and there is a feeling that the season's trade will be a big one. The sentiment seems to be for holding stocks of green, salted and pickled fish with the prospect of higher prices being fairly bright. In the oyster trade the freeze up in the bays where oysters are grown has reduced the output considerably, and it is not so TORONTO.—Trade under cold and favorable weather has continued good. Business with beginning of year opened up well and has continued briskly since. Last week both outgoing and incoming shipments were in a number of cases held up by crippled service on the railroads on account of adverse weather conditions. One firm state that they ran out of sea herring while finnan haddie were also in scarcity for a time.

One firm have placed on market a brand of ciscoes in which great care is given to the smoking and are selling them by weight instead of by the basket as has been usual in the past. Scotch haddie are on the market at $1.50 per box, and Scotch kippers at $1.65 per box.

There is little change in prices. Trade is pretty well distributed. Oysters have come in for fair movement. The cold weather helps along their sale.

Why California Dried Fruits are High

Prunes a Good Crop, But Europe Drew Heavily on Them—Apricots Promised Well, But Crops Failed—Not Large Yield of Peaches—Total Production Ahead of 1910.

A review of the dried fruit season in California at this time is interesting. From this Pacific State we receive a large proportion of our dried fruits, including prunes, seeded and seedless raisins, as well as peaches and apricots. This year prices on these lines followed the general tendency of food products, and while some waverings of a temporary nature occurred in some varieties, the general trend has been upward.

Puzzling Prune Situation.

Prunes hold considerable interest for the grocer, and this year a somewhat peculiar situation has ruled in this commodity. To begin with, early in the season opinions regarding the size of the crop and values differed quite widely even among the best authorities. The out-turn of the crop, however, shows it to be a good one. It is estimated at around 170,000,000 pounds as against 80,000,000 pounds the previous year.

Why in the face of such an increase over the 1910 yield have prices ruled so high and firmly? In the first place, the 1910 crop was small and it is well known that the world's markets at the opening of the present season were extremely bare. Not alone was this the case in America, but the world over. A shortage in foreign prunes and an enormous demand from Europe brought about the full realization of those who looked for prices to keep strong.

Operations in prunes were so heavy at the opening of the season that despite the tonnage produced, this line was practically finished and done for early in the season.

Scarcity of Large Sizes.

Gradings quite early showed large sizes to be scarce. Since things got well started 30's and 40's have commanded big premiums, and the premiums on sizes have gradually worked down the list until almost all the sizes except the very small ones are commanding a premium. Even the small sizes, quite plentiful in California this year, have been taken quite freely by Europe recently. The amount of prunes left in California is small, and the market there is expected to continue with its present strength.

Normal Raisin Production.

Raisins in California have turned out about an average yield—not an excessive one, nor a small one. The output is a little larger than last year, and a little smaller than the three preceding years. The crop did not look so favorable at the beginning of the season. Early frosts were followed by reports of serious damage to the vines, especially for the seedless varieties. Second growth was, however, put out by the vines, and a considerably larger tonnage of raisins was made than many figured on. These adverse reports early in the season set the market at a high level, and a steadily declining tendency set in during the fall.

The market has now recovered to steadiness, and although the carry over just now is quite large, it is said to be no greater than the big carry overs of recent years.

Market Went Up in Apricots.

Apricots have been exceedingly high with many fluctuations. Opening comparatively low, when the smallness of the crop was found out the market went up with a bound, reached a record height, which curtailed sales and then began to sag, but not low enough, however, to cause much business The total yield of California apricots is estimated at 8,800 tons, as against 15,250 in 1910, and 14,000 in 1909.

Short Crop of Peaches.

Peaches have been short also. The 1911 yield is estimated at 13,000 tons, as against 25,000 in 1910. Add to this the strength lent by the high price of apricots and the general depleted condition of dried fruit stocks and you have the reason why prices were held high. The high price has here curtailed sales also, but holdings in California are small, and the general expectancy is for the balance of this line to go out at firm prices.

Thus is summed up the situation in California dried fruits. The total yield in this State for 1911 is estimated at 183,300 tons, as against 151,275 in 1910, and 188,500 in 1909. The increase this year over last has been practically all made up in prunes, and the situation in that line has been covered. The dealer who has now taken stock and knows the extent of his supplies would do well to give some consideration to his requirements, gauge the market situation and buy according to what he considers will be most advantageous to himself. It is yet many months before another crop will be in the hands of the trade.

Auto Delivery Curtails Delivery Expenses

Service is one of the main features which determines a merchant's patronage, with delivery the most important part. Merchants are more and more beginning to realize the many points in favor of automobile delivery, because it brings them more business and because it is cheaper than any other method.

The Menard Commercial Car

has been designed to meet the demand, and is a quiet car of great reliability, reasonable speed, with a large reserve of power and a frame of strength and size capable of carrying a load of considerable bulk and up to 1500 lbs. weight.

The design of tires used on the Menard Commercial Cars reduces the cost of maintaining tires to a nominal sum. There are many other features of the Menard that will impress it upon merchants for its superiority above all others.

It's the Profit That's Lost

By having your goods exposed to the sun that bears down heavily on the grocer. Why not save this and add appearance to your store by putting up an awning which will cost you practically nothing, in comparison to losses of spoilt or damaged stock.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

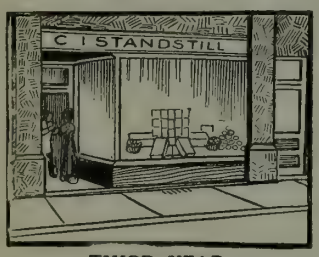
What Progress Have YOU Made in 10 Years?

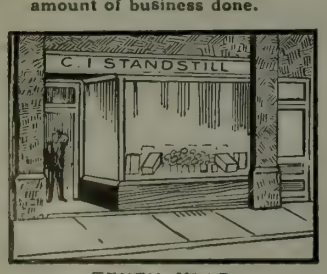
FIRST YEAR
Started in business with new store, new stock and bright prospects.

SECOND YEAR
Doing a fair business, but not quite as much as had been expected.



THIRD YEAR
Same store, good location, but business hasn't grown any. Many customers not regular buyers.

FIFTH YEAR
Still at the old stand. Profits really should net higher on amount of business done.



TENTH YEAR
Can't figure out why other merchants make more money, yet charge same or lower prices than he does.

Some merchants who started business same year as you, have seen their business and profits grow bigger and bigger month after month every year. Others have done "fairly well," making a bare living. Still others have "progressed backwards."

In Which Class Do You Belong?

Have you ever stopped to figure up—to see if you are getting ahead? Your yearly turn-over is how much? Say $30,000. And you figure to net at least 10 per cent. profit. That's $3,000 a year. In 10 years you have EARNED total NET PROFITS of $30,000.

What have you got to show for it? You OUGHT to have a good part of that $30,000. Have you? And you ought to be doing a bigger business with larger profits now than ever before. Do you?

Whether You Succeed or Fail Depends Entirely on Your Methods

If you are not following the right methods you'll make no better progress this year and NEXT year than you have in the past. And your profits will still be in the future. You can't "get ahead" by following the methods of unsuccessful merchants. No use trying. You MUST do as successful merchants do.

Successful Merchants Put a Receipt in Every Parcel

And because National Cash Registers provide the quickest and most accurate method of issuing receipts with every transaction, most successful merchants use the NATIONAL system. Why don't you? Don't say you "can't afford it." The reason you "can't afford" a National Cash Register is because you haven't got one.

THIRD YEAR

FIFTH YEAR
Profits saved in five years enable purchase of better location and erection of own building.

TENTH YEAR
Business well established in new store. His methods attract crowds. Earnings very large. Success fairly won, through better service.

whether they would rather have a monthly statement or a statement in full after each purchase as given by

With Only One Writing The McCASKEY SYSTEM The End of Drudgery

More than 75 per cent. of his customers voted in favor of The McCaskey System. This merchant, Mr. O. Zimmerman, of Jamestown, North Dakota, writes:

"Desiring to learn the wishes of my customers in regard to a system to handle their credit accounts, I submitted to them a choice between a monthly itemized statement and a statement furnished with each purchase, the latter being the principle of The McCaskey System. At the close of the experiment, I am glad to say that a large majority of my five hundred customers expressed themselves in favor of The McCaskey System, which entirely eliminates disputes and improves our collections, enabling us to do a more careful credit business."

There are more than 70,000 McCaskey Systems in use in the United States alone. When will you join the army of McCaskey users?

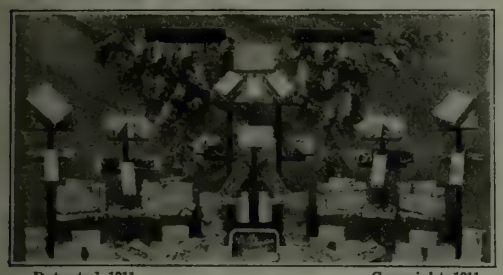
ONKEN
INTERCHANGEABLE
WOOD WINDOW FIXTURE
YOUNITS
TRADE MARK

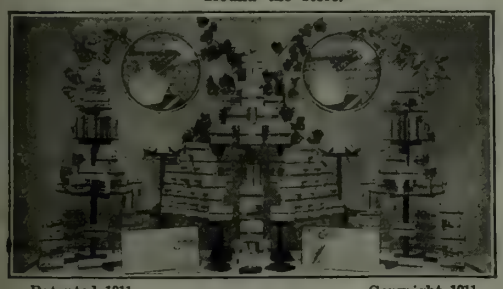
The latest word in fixtures for the grocer's windows

I honestly believe that my new patented set of interchangeable wood window fixtures made exclusively for the grocer's windows is without doubt the best thing that has ever been created.



Patented 1911 Copyright 1911
This is just a sample trim made with 68 YOUNITS of the 125 in the set, leaving 57 that can be used for other trims and individual fixtures.

Patented 1911 Copyright 1911
Another prize winner. This one took only 78 of the 125 YOUNITS in the set, leaving 47 for other uses around the store.



Patented 1911 Copyright 1911
Here is one that took only 68 of the 125 in the set. That leaves you 57 "ONKEN Interchangeable YOUNITS" for other trims and individual fixtures.

I want every ambitious grocer who is keen after more business through his show windows to see how I made 25 beautiful window trims—trims that you can duplicate at as low a cost as 5 cents each by using my set of "ONKEN Interchangeable Wood Window Fixture YOUNITS."

SIMPLE—STRONG—EFFECTIVE

Your window trims may be good, but then, nothing is so good but that it can be improved. Window trimming becomes so simple a matter when a set of "ONKEN Interchangeable YOUNITS" is used that the weekly change of trims becomes a pleasure to be looked forward to, instead of a ceaseless drudge to be abhorred.

Let me send you free my booklet "A Message From Hell"

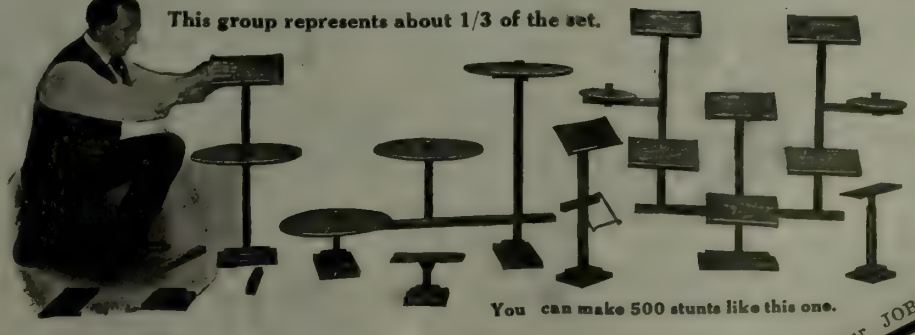
We have this booklet put aside for you. It will give you all the information you may want regarding these wonderful window fixtures. Also a beautiful book of designs showing 25 prize-winning window trims made with less than the total number of "ONKEN Interchangeable YOUNITS" in this set. This book is sent free with each set.

Price, Set No. 14 for the Grocer's Windows, $36.00 Net Cash 30 days. Freight and duty allowed to Winnipeg and to all ports of entry east of Winnipeg on the southern Canadian Border.

The price of this set is a great deal less than the amount you will lay out for a lot of fixtures with permanent forms which will not meet all your requirements.

NOTE.—Besides my Grocery set, I make another set for the General store dealer. With this set you can make any kind of window-trims such as grocery, hardware, furnishings, haberdashery, wearing apparel, shoes, drugs and any other kind of merchandise handled by the general store. This set No. 4, Price $28.00. A book of designs showing 32 window-trims covering all lines goes free with this set.

Made of solid oak, in weathered oak (waxed) finish



This group represents about 1/3 of the set.

You can make 500 stunts like this one.

Nature has solved the problem of distribution. It uses a multitude of agents to effect the distribution of its products.

Nature does not expect every seed to fall upon fallow ground and to take root. But, it achieves a profitable percentage upon its distribution. This is all that an advertiser has to do to reap a profitable harvest on his outlay.

Mr. Grocer—

Do You Realize Just What Heinz Advertising Is Doing For You?

NEVER before did our advertising plans mean as much to the good grocers of this country as they do this year.

We are educating the general public to a higher appreciation of the family grocer, We are making it plain that when you offer Heinz 57 Varieties Pure Food Products and other lines of similar high quality to your customers, you do it to give them more value for their money.

We are bearing down upon seasonable products, too—actual selling talk that sends buyers to your store convinced and ready to purchase.

The way to take full advantage of this effort, Mr. Grocer, is to carry a good line of Heinz goods and keep in touch with the real spirit of the Heinz institution.

That's quality business; and it pays in the long run.

Bill to Levy Tax on Mail Order Houses

One in Course of Preparation to be Introduced into Ontario Legislature—Goderich Board of Trade Behind the Measure—Some Merchants Opinions on the Proposal—Tax Would be Based on Local Dealers' Taxes.

Merchants throughout Ontario are be coming much interested in the proposal to introduce a bill into the legislature re placing a local business tax on mail order houses doing business in any municipality in competition with retail merchants.

The principle of the bill is to give municipalities where business is being done by mail order houses in direct competition with local merchants the option of levying a local business tax on these houses based on the average tax paid by the local merchants.

Started in Goderich.

The seed was sown in Goderich, Huron County, and is being vigorously nursed by the Board of Trade, of Goderich, backed up by the retail merchants.

It is a well-known fact that the large catalogue houses have been for years and are still doing much business in many Ontario municipalities and at no cost while merchants of these localities are striving for the same business in the face of, in some cases at least, heavy taxation. While the spread of this mail order business is to a large extent due to the inadequate methods of store and business operation on the part of merchants, yet in the eyes of local dealers it seems unfair that outside houses can sell to their customers without paying any tax whatever.

This is the point the Goderich Board of Trade and Goderich merchants are studying carefully and they are now backed up by other Ontario Boards of Trade and most certainly have the sympathy of the majority of local merchants.

N. C. Cameron, a Goderich dealer, who is taking a deep interest in the proposed legislation has interviewed among others, President Somers of the Toronto Board of Trade.

Sympathises with Purpose of Bill.

Mr. Somers, while in sympathy with the movement, told The Grocer he was in doubt how the scope of such legislation could be limited. The question is, would it include ordinary general mail order houses only or would it take in all manufacturers selling their particular products in outside municipalities.

The Grocer got in touch with a number of general merchants in Ontario to secure their views on the question.

Tax Suggested too Low.

A Midland dealer does not believe a tax based on the average tax of local merchants is sufficient. It would amount to mere nothing, he says.

"I do not think that under the present system of taxation any merchant pays more than 1 per cent. at the very outside," he said. "In fact we are doing a business of over a quarter of a million, and our total taxes only amount to $800. So you see it would only amount to ⅛ of 1 per cent. in our business.

"We think that mail order houses should be charged a percentage on every dollar's worth of business they do outside their own city.

"It costs the average merchant 12½ per cent. for wages alone to sell his goods. This does not take into account rent or money invested in building and plant, nor any of the other expenses incidental to carrying on business.

"The money we pay out in wages to salespeople is spent in our own town and the town receives its revenue in the way of taxes, whereas the mail order houses while they pay wages to employes on the particular goods sent to small towns, those wages go to pay taxes in the cities.

Five per cent. on the Dollar.

"So it seems to us there should be some other way of getting after the mail order concerns. We think that not less than 5 per cent. would be a fair levy on every dollar's worth of merchandise entering a town from mail order houses."

A Napanee merchant does not favor the local business tax being made optional on the part of the municipality.

"The mail order houses," he affirms, "do their biggest business outside the towns, villages and cities," intimating that farming communities would not favor it.

Would Stop Auction Sales.

A Brantford dealer, approached on the matter, is in favor of some such legislation and promises to support the measure. He is in accord with the suggestion that the tax levied be based on the average tax of the merchants of a particular municipality.

At the same time this merchant brought up the question of passing a measure to deal with "the auctioneering off of all kinds of worthless stuff brought in from outside points."

This is something that might well be looked into by merchants. In some towns and cities there are these auction sales going on all the time. A quantity of goods is brought in—often of little use—and sold off to bargain hunters who have long grocery bills unpaid. Views on this subject from readers should prove interesting.

Now that the question of taxing mail order houses has been brought forward seriously every merchant should do his share to help it along if it is found feasible.

REVIEW OF THE TEA MARKET DURING 1911

Forces that United to Make It High One—Top Price Touched in October and November.

London, E.C., Jan. 23.—A review of the tea market during 1911 shows the distinct rise in values made during the latter part of 1910 have been further improved on.

The average price for Indian teas during the year was 8.91d., an advance of .61d. over the previous year. While that of Ceylon was 8.88d. as against 8.19d. in 1910.

These figures had not been previously reached since 1897 and 1893, respectively, while as recently as 1905, the Indian average was 7.30d. and the Ceylon 6.99d.

The shortage from Northern India in the early months of the year, the drought during the middle of the year in several districts of Ceylon and Southern India, the dockers' strike in Europe and well sustained competition were the factors contributing strength last year.

The highest point of the market was touched during October and November when the price of common leaf tea advanced to 8¼d, a figure not previously recorded since 1891.

The Management of a Retail Business

No. 5—CASH DISCOUNTS

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

We will suppose that two men are about to start in business, as competitors, each with the same amount of capital, which we will fix at $3,500, and equal in other respects, such as location of store, popularity, organization, and general knowledge of the goods handled.

As the purpose of the article is to show, in figures, the advantage of discounting bills, we will assume that both merchants start free of debt, and with a new stock worth $2,500, of well selected goods, the remaining $1,000 being invested in fixtures and equipment. Management and other expenses of operation will be assumed as being the same in both cases, with selling prices and volume of business averaging about the same say for the first three months. The only difference is that No. 1 has determined to sell for cash as far as may be possible, to insist on prompt collections each 30 days, where cash can not be secured, and to lose no opportunity to discount his bills of purchase, while No. 2 intends to take trade as it comes, without any preconceived ideas as to collections or discounts.

End of First Month.

No. 1 has found it difficult to sell for cash, while No. 2 sells at the same price on credit, so that the turnover has been about the same, say $1,000, one third for cash, and the balance on credit. Purchases have been $500, in each case, and No. 2 finds his position as follows :—

Cash in hand, after paying $150 running expenses	$183
Accounts Receivable	667
Owing to Creditors	500

No. 1, at the very start, foresaw that he would have to borrow, if bills were to be discounted ; and had therefore laid the state of his affairs before his bank, and arranged a line of credit of $1,000. On this he had borrowed $125 each week, or $500 in all, each note at 30 days costing him 73c at 7 per cent. per annum. With the proceeds of each note he had discounted bills at 2 per cent., making $2.50 on each, or $10 cash discounts taken at a cost of $2.92, equivalent to $7.08 net gain in discounts. His running expenses had been the same as No. 2, and the first note being due, it is paid, showing his position as follows :—

Cash in hand after paying $150 running expenses, and $125 note to bank	$ 65.08
Accounts reivable	667.00
Bank indebtedness	375.00

Thus far No. 1 has beaten No. 2 by $708 actual profit, and only owes the bank, while No. 2 has already begun to strain his credit in the jobbing market.

Second Month.

During the first week, No. 1, having sent out his accounts promptly, has collected say $400 of his outstandings, while No. 2, less aggressive, has gathered in $250. Business, in the meantime, is extending, and the sales, in each case, for the second month have reached $1,500, No. 1, in pursuance of his cash policy, as far as possible taking in $900, with $600 in accounts, while No. 2 collects $500 cash, with credits of $1,000.

Purchases have also increased to say $1,000 in each case, for the second month. No. 2 had cash in hand $183 at the beginning of the month, he collected $250 during the first week, and a further $150 during the month, which, with $500 cash sales, makes a total of $1,083. He has paid his merchandise accounts of the first month $500, as indeed he had to do, to insure his further orders being filled, but no discounts have been taken, and a further $150 has been paid out in expenses, leaving his position as follows :—

Cash in hand	$ 433
Accounts receivable	$1,267
Owing to creditors	$1,000

No. 1, on the other hand, has met his bank notes promptly at maturity, and discounted a further $300 for 30 days, which amount, together with cash sales and a further $150 collected from last month's accounts receivable, has been adequate to enable him to take his cash discounts of 2 per cent. on $1,000 purchases. He, likewise, has paid expenses of $150, and stands as follows, at the close of the second month.

Cash in hand	$308.33
Accounts receivable	717.00
Owing to bank (not due)	300.00

No. 1 has made $18.25 in discounts, after paying bank charges, which places him $25.33 ahead of the other merchant, but his accounts are more satisfactory, for he owes no one outside of his bank. He finds, however, that his accounts receivable are larger than he had intended, and prodeeds, even more energetically, to their collection. He explains to his customers that prompt payment is necessary, and asks their support in placing his business on a cash basis. Within the first 10 days of the third month he has reduced his accounts receivable to $300, and collected a further $200 during the month, leaving his outstandings at $100, which he finds difficult to collect. No. 2 has likewise collected about half of his accounts receivable, and applied the funds to the reduction of his indebtedness. Business is going on however, and the third month's business shows $2.000 each in sales, but while No. 1 has sold two-thirds of the amount for cash, his competitor has been content with one third cash, his credits being increased by the balance. Purchases in the meantime have amounted to $1,500 in each case, and No. 1 finds that although he has paid the bank, he must again borrow, this time $150 to enable him to discount.

End of Third Month.

At the end of the first quarter's business, No. 2 finds that his accounts stand as follows :

Cash in hand	$ 582.00
Accounts receivable	1,967.00
Owing to creditors	1,500.00

No. 1, however, has discounted every bill at 2 per cent., making $29.12, after paying bank charges on his new loan of $150, and exhibits the following statement :

Cash in hand	$487.45
Accounts receivable	766.00
Owing to bank (not due)	150.00

Being the end of the first three months business, both merchants use their cash in hand so far as possible or necessary in paying off indebtedness, adjusting the accounts to the following basis :—No. 2 with no cash in hand, owes his creditors $918, and has accounts receivable to collect $1,967, while No. 1 owes nothing, has $766 in accounts receivable, and $337.45 in cash.

He has earned an excellent reputation in the wholesale trade, gained a good name at his bank, and made $54.45 more than his competitor. No. 2 is, of course in good financial condition, but dependent upon his customers to make ends meet.

What Balance Sheet Shows.

Next week we will traverse the next three months of the business introducing special features. Thus far their balance sheets are as follows, the sales, amounting to $4,500, at say 25 per cent. profit and the purchases amounting to $3,000 in each case :

No. 1.

Assets.
Cash	$ 337.45
Stock	2,125.00
Account rec.	766.00
Fix., etc.	1,000.00
	$4,228.45
No Liabilities.
Gain	$728.45

No. 2.

Assets.
Stock	$2,125.00
Ac. rec.	1,967.00
Fix., etc.	1,000.00
	5,092.00
Liabilities.
Account payable	918.00
	$4,174.00
Gain	$674.00

STRICT PURE FOOD LEGISLATION

The Grocer understands that the pure food legislation to be introduced into the House of Commons by Claude Macdonnel, M.P. will be of a far reaching character.

While the details are not yet arranged in such a position as to be made public, it is learned that the government at Ottawa will enact legislation that will include all the best features of pure food acts in United States, Great Britain, Germany, etc.

It will be remembered that a couple of years ago food standards were prepared through the Inland Revenue Department and a number have become law. No changes to established standards are likely but those on other foods will be set with regard to highest efficiency in the manufacture of food stuffs.

With regard to the enforcement of food standards The Grocer learns this will be done under the most stringent regulations. Hitherto Canada has in many cases received foreign goods which have been turned away from United States ports by United States government authorities. The recent Chinese egg case in Montreal is one familiar example of this. That it will be a difficult matter for importers to bring goods into Canadian ports that are not exactly as represented is apparently one of the features in connection with the new legislation. The same applies to goods of home manufacture. The men behind the movement seem determined that misrepresentation of foods will be strictly eliminated.

The retail trade has a protection in this matter which they should not overlook. Any retail grocer purchasing goods from a wholesaler or manufacturer can demand a guarantee that the goods are pure. If he gets this guarantee he will be fully protected by law. If he doesn't ask for it and doesn't get it he will be held liable for any adulteration that government inspectors may discover in goods he handles.

From our information, which comes from an authoritative source, it certainly looks as if we are to have stringent food standards and what is of more importance we may look forward to seeing them firmly enforced.

KNOCKING HIS OWN STORE.

Sometimes grocers are not discriminating enough in remarks they make while customers are in the store. The merchant who said before a store full of customers that he didn't know how certain departmental stores could sell so cheaply was thoughtlessly advertising those competitors. As a matter of fact they cannot sell many articles as cheaply as other merchants, but nevertheless the damage was done just the same.

Another actual case of careless speech came to notice the other day.

While two or three customers were in the store the dealer, on seeing another enter, remarked in a loud voice, "So, I hear you didn't like the butter we sent you last week."

It isn't likely those customers will feel safe in ordering butter from that store in future. While the dealer added he had some of better quality in now, yet this store was advertised by the dealer himself as one that couldn't always be depended upon, so far, at least, as butter was concerned.

DEALER'S POWER TO CREATE SALES.

That a dealer can sell goods in which he takes an interest is proven by a story of the manager of a corn-flake manufacturing company.

Not long ago he went into a retail store for a package of corn flakes and naturally asked for those of his firm's manufacture. The dealer had them, but they were stocked in his back shop, where, of course, no one could ever see them.

He was taken gently and reasonably to task for investing his money in goods then placing them out of sight of customers and not attempting to sell them.

The talk bore fruit. The grocer brought the goods out to the shelves and counter and in a short time had placed a repeat order with the corn flake firm.

This actual incident emphasises the power of the dealer and his store to create sales if he takes an interest in them. Had he left the goods in the unpacking room the probabilities are they would have been there yet. This story also illustrates the results that can be obtained through the co-operation of manufacturer and retailer.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

The situation is little changed from last week with the exception that the Interstate Railroad Commission has seen fit to grant the Canadian Roads Commission to quote lower rates for the cartage of Canadian grain to U. S. centres for storage in bond. This will mean a great boon to the western farmers as it will assure a place of storage for their many thousands of bushels which they are at present unable to market because there is no place to store it after it has been bought by the dealers.

So disgusted have many of the farmers in western Canada became over last year's conditions that reports are reaching the city daily of men who will not even attempt to thresh their grain in the spring but intend to burn the sheaves as they stand in stook early in the spring when preparing the grain for market. Such a condition is truly lamentable but as in some places the ground is needed for sowing again, they deem it most advisable system to follow. Others are advocating that the grain be left in stook till after the seeding season has passed and then it be threshed. There is no doubt that both systems will be followed next spring and the results will be watched with interest by many.

Shipments of grain over the various railroad lines continue to be received in large quantities at the inspection department, but there are yet many reports of car shortages being received from western points. It is hoped that the proposed changes that the railroad companies have agreed to effect will prevent anything of a like nature occurring next year.

Reports from Edmonton where a Farmers' Convention has been held for the last few days indicate that a deputation of western farmers from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba will visit Premier Roblin shortly at Ottawa to discuss with him points relating to the government ownership of interior elevators. It would appear as if the farmers wish the elevators to be controlled by an independent commission which will not be bound by any department. This will mean that no minister of a department will have the control of this commission.

KEEP CLOSE TAB ON BUSINESS.

The United Cigar Stores Company, who have retail stores all over the American continent, are noted for their systematic methods of conducting business.

In the first place the location of a new store is not made without knowledge that it will be a suitable and profitable one. Facts are first secured as to the number of possible customers passing prospective store sites. For instance, a corner in a city where many men congregate is a favorable location for a store.

Their operating system has eliminated all guesswork and drudgery. The president in New York knows at any given time just how many cigars of any brand are in stock in any store and the amount sold in any given time. This is made possible from reports from all stores which are daily placed on file. These reports show the weak and strong spots in all stores and one helps to check or advance those spots in others.

An inventory is taken every day. The United Cigar Stores carry more than a million dollars worth of stuff. The president has a book showing at any time just how the business stands. This book contains a list of heads such as "gross sales," "rent," "miscellaneous wages," "cost of lighting stores," "miscellaneous expenses," "general expense," "money spent in schemes over which the store has no control," such as special advertising, etc.

Formal inventories are taken by men sent out from the home office twelve times a year, arranged at irregular and unexpected times, and they have also daily reports of sales.

"Yearly inventories," says the president, "wouldn't be of any use to us—or half-yearly or quarterly. Too much can happen in three months. We want to know what is wrong before anybody else knows."

There are many points in the policy of this company in their system to know exactly where they stand, which would be well worth careful study on the part of retail grocers.

CANNERS SHOULD ATTEND CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the National Canners' Association and Allied Industries will be held in Rochester, N.Y., Feb. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. As will be seen from the program printed elsewhere in this issue, it will be an important gathering and is destined to eclipse in prominence its predecessors.

Addresses will be given by authorities on every important subject bearing on the canned goods industry. The machinery exhibit on the exposition grounds, where the sessions will also be held, will be a leading feature of the convention. All manner of canning machinery and canners' supplies will be on exhibition, including all latest machines and devices.

Every canned goods manufacturer in Canada who possibly can should be represented at this convention. Rochester can be easily reached by the majority and the opportunity to attend should not be missed.

In referring to conventions a suggestion has been made that canners in Canada form an association in affiliation with the National Canners' organization. It is felt by some that the fish, fruit and vegetable canning industry has now grown to such an extent that an association in this country would be feasible. Opinions of canners on this suggestion would be interesting.

The Principles of the Bulk Sales Act now in operation in majority of Western Canadian provinces, and likely to become law in Ontario, are to be commended. Such act requires a buyer purchasing a business to inquire into accounts of the seller and also requires a certain number of the seller's creditors agreeing to the transfer and therefore of being informed that the sale is taking place. This prevents the seller from escaping his obligations as a debtor and insures his creditors of at least a portion of their just dues.

Some Association Efforts Going to Seed

"That Government is Best That Governs Least," Says the Old Proverb—Correspondent Places His Opinions and Experiences Before Store Management Editor—Will be Gone Into Fully Next Week.

*By Henry Johnson, Jr.

The matters treated in this article must be disguised more than usual as to locality; and it is better so since what we need is the lesson of the example, not any gossip of the specific instance. Moreover, I can give only the introduction this week, reserving comment for next issue.

The correspondence begins with this letter:

Dec. 28, 1911.

Henry Johnson, Jr., Canadian Grocer:

Dear Sir,—We are mailing the enclosed pamphlet to our competitors. We are not doing this not to advertise The Grocer, but to settle the questions on first page, particularly the first one. Some of our competitors whose percentage of expense is double ours, who excel in credit, time delivery and store service, think we should have the same prices. We believe our clear profits above expenses for the last twelve years have been larger than the average, if not larger than any other grocery store in town. Yet we are called price-cutters because we follow most all competitors' cut prices, and very often continue after they stop.

We make some prices which still leave us a good profit. The cost and below cost prices have been started by our competitors.

In July, 1911, Mr. Blank held two meetings here, also one or more meetings in Dash, to which we believe every grocer but ourselves was invited. We were not approached, consulted or invited. A retail grocers' association was organized here and in Dash, grocers paying $5 per member to join.

While Mr. Blank was urged to consult us and invite us to the meeting, and the first meeting adjourned with the understanding that he was to see us the next morning and invite us to the meeting, his policy was force; he claimed the society could and would force all stores to sell at the highest regular prices, or stop them getting goods.

Since the organization here, prices have been worse than before, and the two promoters (or assistant promoters) have been the worst price-cutters; one displaying in his window the leading 10c articles assorted 3 for 25c, and some 2 for 15c, and advertising 18 pounds standard granulated or yellow sugar for $1; the other advertising 18 pounds best granulated and 19 pounds best yellow sugar for $1.

Enclosed are the ads.; we have not followed those prices. The wholesale price of granulated sugar, bags, here was September 8 to December 6, C. L., $5.98; L. C. L., $6.03, but the retail price never went above $5.85.

The president of the Dash R. G. A. got the consent of ourselves and all others, but these two for reasonable prices, but these two who joined the association in Dash, and assisted Mr. Blank in promoting it here, now pose as the open leading price-cutters. Both are high class credit stores, and such dissatisfaction prevails that the Dash R. G. A. has never had a meeting since organizing in July last.

We would be pleased to have any new, more pointed or complete answers to the questions in the enclosed pamphlet. We are sure any article in The Grocer on "Credit vs. Cash," and anything further on the questions on the first page of this pamphlet will be appreciated at least here and in Dash.

Yours truly,

W. A. G.

Here is the "pamphlet" to which reference is made:

CREDIT BUSINESS VS. CASH BUSINESS.

Should both stores have same prices?

What is average expense of crediting?

Has the country store the right to peddle?

Should the price for eggs and groceries be the same at farmers' houses as at a town store?

Has a man the right to run a cash grocery? If so, could he run it on credit stores' regular prices with no discounts?

If a cash store does not have to compete with a credit store's inducements, does a credit store have to compete with a cash store's discounts?

If credit stores meet a cash store's prices and discounts, also give credit, time, better delivery, etc., as extra inducements, would they not be underselling the cash store?

Is $93 cash equal to $100 grocery accounts, when we consider time charging, time and expense collecting, use of money and losses by bad debts?

One grocer's total expenses may be much less than 10 per cent., another's expenses over 20 per cent. To draw trade from his competitor the latter has added 10 or 12 per cent. to his necessary expenses. If a grocer tries to excel the expenses of the latter and undersell the former, who is to blame for his failure?

The Canadian Grocer, in previous issues, has answered all these questions, also quoted instances showing successful and unsuccessful policies of The Retail Grocers' Association, as tried in other towns.

Canadian Grocer, Oct. 20th, 1911, page 30 and 31, "Advice on Changing to Cash Business." Part of third column reads:

"First, the credit losses will look very small compared with the losses resulting from a GENERAL REDUCTION OF PRICES SUFFICIENT TO LOOK LIKE 'INDUCEMENTS' to the usual buyer.

"The cash business is emphatically one wherein the merchant must enforce his own rules and ways of doing business."

Canadian Grocer, Nov. 24th, 1911, page 32 and 33, "A Cash Business as Opposed to Credit." The question is asked:

In a town of 4,000, where all other grocers give credit and time, ranging from a week to several months, can a man make a success of a strictly cash grocery business without cutting prices on some lines or giving a cash discount on some lines?

Answered by Henry Johnson, Jr.

*"The writer of this article is one of the most successful dealers on the continent. He has spent almost 30 years in the retail grocery business, and is well equipped to answer questions and smooth out difficulties with which others may have met."—Canadian Grocer's foot note.

Part of the answer is (See third column):

"You will immediately think of the big cash dealer of whom you have more or less intimate knowledge and information and you will be apt to say that such a man shows that the cash business is the right business if you know how to run it. I answer that the same man you refer to, is successful because he is made that way and, had he done a credit instead of a cash business, he would have stood just as high above the rest of us as he now stands. IT IS THE MAN—NOT ANY MAGIC IN THE METHOD.

"Specifically to refer to the question of cut prices: YES, YOU WILL MAKE SOME SPECIAL PRICES IF YOU SELL FOR CASH, but actually you will not make more of them than you would as a live credit-giving man. When we sold "patents" we sold them on the average for 85c for the dollar preparation, 40c for the 50c preparation, etc. But this was actually about the range at which the druggist sold. The difference was that we displayed and advertised these things, while the druggist cloaked himself in more or less mystery and pretended to get regular prices.

"Suppose you do $12,000 per annum, of which $5,000 is presently credit. In the way of actual expenses, what can you save through changing from credit to cash? Counting all time taken on these accounts and all wasted time on these matters, can you actually figure THAT YOU WOULD SAVE $30 A MONTH?

If that is the extent of your saving you have 3 per cent. to use in the way of a general reduction in your prices. Where will you put that percentage to make it show up strikingly to your trade?"

Note the above figures $5,000 credit sales equals a loss and expense of 3 per cent. on total sales, or equals 7.2 per cent. on the credit sales. So if a store sells 5-12 credit and 7-12 cash it takes about 3 per cent. on total sales to cover loss and expenses of credit sales.

Mr. Johnson in writing the above considers the saving of a cash business will be used in reducing prices, and put where it will show up most strikingly.

Canadian Grocer, Nov. 24th, 1911, Page 42, refers to Burr Bros., Rockford, Ill., as successful merchants in operating both credit and cash stores, in the same city, for many years.

We wrote Burr Bros. asking if from their experience a cash grocery could exist at credit prices; and if a credit store had to meet cash store prices. They wrote us the following:

Rockford, Ill., Dec. 1st, 1911.

Gentlemen:—Replying to your favor of the 25th. It is absurd for the Retail Grocers' Association of your city to ask you to sell goods at cash at the same prices they are charging for credit and delivery as no concern on earth could sell goods at cash without offering some inducement in the way of less prices.

We make a difference of about 10 per cent. between our credit and cash stores On some things even 15 or 20 per cent., but we do not deliver anything out of the cash stores. For instance, we sell the 10c items at 9c; 15c items for 12c; 25c items at 21 or 22c. Our cash stores are no experiment but have been running for some time. We have three stores in this city, two cash and one credit, and understand we are the only concern in the city who don't belong to the Retail Grocers' Association.

No store doing a cash business has any business to belong to a Retail Grocers' Association where they fix prices, but should run their own business and not be dictated to by others.

We have belonged to the association here but not for ten years.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) BURR BROS.

Per C. D. Burr, Pres.

To Our Competitors.

Out of 100 grocers starting a cash business about 99 quickly slide to more or less credit, because it is the easiest and most pleasant way to increase trade.

For twelve years we have run a cash grocery, and studied everything published in The Canadian Grocer on cash business. We note every writer considers it a hard, most difficult business, demanding a lot of special prices or cash discounts.

We have given some discounts as we think a cash grocer should. We have met cut prices, cost prices, and below cost prices started by some of our competitors with various excuses and selfish reasons, but we have not made prices or given discounts that did not give us a fair profit as a cash business.

The promoters of the Retail Grocers' Association in Blank and Blank planned a contemptible game which they should have known would be detrimental to the trade. We were not consulted or invited but were to be forced to higher prices.

See Canadian Grocer, April, 1911, Page 45: A full page referring to Grocers' Association experience in an attempt to force prices up and deny supplies, also on meeting or ignoring competitors' prices.

One clause reads: "Any plan which savors of coercion will get nowhere no matter how great may be its apparent strength."

We wish to be friendly and fair with our competitors, and do business on fair, honorable business principles, believing there is lots of room for one cash store and several credit stores in each town.

Manufacturers, Wholesalers, Bankers and Brokers all agree that an account which may be paid at par at some future date is subject to a discount for spot cash. Thus if a bill of groceries can be purchased at a certain price, payable in three months, with no guarantee of payment then or ever, should not a cash store allow some discount?

We presume that Burr Bros., running both kinds of stores in opposition to themselves, may be considered the best authority in America.

We respectfully ask our competitors to read the recent full page article in Canadian Grocer on Cash versus Credit Business and compare actual experiences with the policy, statements and promises of Mr. ——— while in ——— and vicinity last July.

There is something decidedly wrong with any man or policy that seeks to stab a person in the back, but dare not face him in the open.

There is a lot to be discouraged in the foregoing. It seems odd that grown men should enter into such time-consuming bickerings. But the facts are there and it is just possible that they may be led to listen to reason. Then, too, there are a few bits of debatable ground, worthy of serious consideration. I shall try to work some order out of the chaos next week.

VANCOUVER RETAILERS WANT PROTECTION

Going on with Work of Forming Buying Association if Wholesale Dealers Continue to Sell to Hotels and Restaurants —Success of Collection Department.

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 25.—(Special) —Further discussion took place at last meeting of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association last night in regard to the establishment of a distributing produce house, with grocers as stockholders, in opposition to those wholesalers who are going over the heads of the retailers after the hotel and restaurant business.

Several of the leading wholesale dealers in produce state they do not want the hotel and restaurant business and are not after it. The fact remains nevertheless that some of the trade has gone that way, and the retailers are perfecting steps for their own protection. They are going steadily ahead with the preliminaries of formation of the co-operative company, so that they will be all ready to start up if offences are again reported. There has been some talk along wholesale row in respect to this move, and the story was current that the wholesale produce dealers had forfeited their individual deposits of $50, given as a bond to bind their understanding with the retailers This, of course, did not take place, for no such bond is asked for or could be asked for, nor was one ever suggested. While there may be an understanding in regard to trade matters, it is only to facilitate harmon-

MONTREAL, Jan. 25.—A good normal January trade is generally reported by local jobbers. Weather conditions with opening of the month could not be described as conducive to trade, but the more favorable temperature now ruling should work for good steady wholesale trade. Stock taking has brought to light odds and ends which wholesalers are now making an effort to dispose of. Travellers are endeavoring to roll up a good volume of sales for the opening month.

Price changes during the week have been few. Dealers are wondering what can next be expected of the sugar market. Many regard the critical moment as at hand. The market is at least such as to deserve close attention from the trade. Dried fruits, currants, package dates and evaps are firmer.

SUGAR.—Raw sugar increased in New York 30c. last week after Grocer had gone to press, but dropped again on Saturday. Retailers should pay particualr attention to the market just now. While indications are that the market will remain steady, yet there are certain points which would lead one to expect an increase not at all unlikely. The shortage of European beets, which amounted to 2,000,000 tons, has left England in such a condition that she has had to purchase on the Cuban market. Large sales have been made quite recently in Montreal by the refiners. The situation at present is interesting and needs attention.

TEA.—The tea market shows no change from conditions prevailing. The inquiry covers the general list at steady prices, being of a routine character.

Owing to the further outbreak in China the situation is critical as far as the next tea crops are concerned. It is quite likely that the crop will be curtailed and this points to higher prices.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.—Some jobbers report canned goods rather quiet. Others say movement of vegetables is quite brisk, showing recent improvement. Retailers, however, in majority of cases stocked up well at beginning of season and their stocks have not been reduced low enough to warrant further buying.

Retailers are finding brisk demand for canned goods and general opinion seems to be that in spite of high prices the consumption is keeping up well. Many dealers report sales just as large as in previous years.

Standard apples in 3s are regarded as being worth $1.20 per dozen. Blueberries are pretty well sold up and as high os $6 is being asked for gallons. The short pack in raspberries and strawberries is well known and with supplies being gradually reduced, a strengthening in price of these lines is not a surprise. For 2s. in heavy syrup $2.35 to $2.40 is being asked. Raspberries appear to be shortest line.

On the whole, jobbers are not finding brisk trade in canned goods, but there is a big period of demand still ahead and holders are certainly doing no worrying over the disposal of stocks.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Currants.—Firm.

Standard Apples, 3's.—Higher.

Strawberries and Raspberries.—Higher.

Toronto, Jan. 25.—Fair volume of business for month is generally reported by local jobbers. More favorable weather and passing of stock-taking is helping some. Collections are described as fair.

Steadiness is evident in all lines of canned goods. In case of some lines which showed short pack last season this steadiness has developed into marked strength. In this respect might be mentioned strawberries, raspberries and blueberries.

The sugar situation hinges to large extent on whether Russia will be allowed to export her surplus sugar. The Brussel convention convenes on Jan. 29. "The situation is a perplexing one," said one sugar man. "I would advise operating conservatively but to keep in close touch with the market, and be ready to buy on the first definite sign of strength."

Some little time ago some firms reduced prices on cocoa and chocolate 2 cents per pound. Some other firms have followed this week. One firm notes a decline of 2 cents per pound on chocolate and bulk cocoa and 5c a dozen on ¼'s and ½'s tins of cocoa and 10c on 1 lb. tins.

SUGAR.—The Brussels convention which has to deal with export of Russia's surplus sugar which is to convene again on Jan. 29 holds to a large extent key to sugar situation. For this reason it is by no means an easy matter to size up present situation. England is short of sugar and in the absence of ample supplies from European beet countries, has been looking towards Cuba and West Indies for supplies. This, of course, firms market on this side of the water, for these are the sources of our supplies. If Russia is allowed to export her surplus, England will not find it necessary to draw supplies from this side, accordingly putting an easier tone into the market. However, this not being allowed, the opposite feeling will follow.

New York is regarded as being pretty close to bottom if not already there. Stocks of sugar held are generally low and will soon have to be replenished. Unless Cuban crop turns out better than anticipated and there is pressure to sell it looks as if Cuban prices might be at low point. Sugar is regarded as being at critical point and needs close watching.

DRIED FRUITS — There are no quotable changes in dried fruits this week. Currants is a line that is pointed out as possessing noted features of strength. The small stocks left in Greece are regarded as ample reason for firmness and ideas of holders in the primary have been increasing. Those who put in sufficient stocks early in the season were fortunate. One dealer shows the advance by stating that he can sell his best goods which were bought early as cheaply as the lower grades would sell if bought now.

Stocks of dates locally are said to be rather light. One jobber states that quality of late arrivals of Hallowees on the English markets has been quite poor and dealers there have first been getting confirmation from buyers here before sending shipments forward.

Evaporated apples maintain the strength both here and on other markets that has been pointed out before.

TEA.—At the opening January auctions in London, values on both Indian and Ceylon tea ruled steady and unchanged from the closing sale of 1911. Quality of Ceylon in many instances showed further falling off.

Revolution in China, it is believed, will have considerable tendency in firming prices of tea from that country, particularly if the feud continues for any length of time.

COFFEE.—General coffee market has lost none of its strength and there appears to be nothing at hand to shape it otherwise. There have been some slight waverings in some of the lower grades of goods but better lines hold up well. As pointed out by one dealer, the big interests have coffee well under their control and are not likely to allow prices to sag off. They do, it is true, allow market to ease off at times, probably to get dealers thinking about buying, but this is most likely to be followed by a firmer tendency.

SPICES.—The year has opened up quite well, some dealers reporting it in advance of last year. This is encouraging to all engaged in the trade. It is pointed out that the revolution in China may exert a strengthening tendency on Cassia which we import from that country, although no change has taken place as yet.

NUTS.—The general market in nuts is steady to firm. We referred last week to the higher values in almonds. Walnut prices are also well maintained. WINNIPEG, Jan. 19.—In spite of extremely cold weather, which was only broken a few days ago, trade during January has been satisfactory and is far ahead of last year. Owing to prevailing conditions, however, the movement of freight has been bad and business has been hung up during the last month considerably by congestion of freight in yards. With extreme cold and blockage of cars it has been practically impossible to move the cars in the yards and numerous cases have again been brought to light where farmers have had cars in the yards anywhere from 10 to 18 days and have been unable to get them shunted to their warehouse.

The new programme, however, which is laid out by the C.P.R. for improvement of the terminals is viewed by all as being satisfactory and will fill a long felt want. It was expressed by one wholesaler to-day that so far this winter railroad companies have had their hands full moving passenger trains instead of bothering about freight.

As stated above, the severe cold weather has been broken to some extent but only to be followed with January storms. Reports from the country show that travelers are having extreme difficulty in covering their territory. Owing to the unsatisfactory condition of the roads it was pointed out that it was almost impossible to tell where one traveler is from day to day as conditions are so unsettled. It is expected that the majority will be many weeks over their allowance in completing their routes for spring orders.

Of the different lines sales have been fairly steady and show that market is holding steady. New prices will be noticed in beans which show an advance over last week, but other lines remain firm.

SUGAR.—The demand for this line remains fairly good but market is still weak. Much speculation is indulged in as to the probable action of market but it was firmly stated by one large house this morning they anticipated cheaper sugar. Prices will be noticed to be unchanged from last week.

CANNED GOODS.—Demand for all kinds of canned goods continues to be exceptionally good. Interest at present time is centered in tomatoes; stocks in this line being low. The price of $3.60 a crate has been high water market as yet and there have been sales made at these prices without any trouble. It is freely predicted by all that there will not be a case in jobbers' hands when new crop comes on the market. Other lines are also creating considerable interest but stocks in them are considerably heavier than tomatoes.

DRIED FRUITS.—Demand is fairly good for dried fruits and prices show no change from last week. The figures quoted here are on the basis of last fall's prices owing to fact that fairly heavy stocks in all lines have been carried here. As soon, however, as stocks begin to grow smaller and as wholesalers start to replenish their supplies these low prices will advance. The California market price at present time is way out of proportion of prices asked in Winnipeg and as a result higher prices can be looked for within few months.

EVAPORATED APPLES — This line has taken a flurry this week due to export demand and fact that available stock supply is getting into hands of fewer holders. It is felt strongly here that this line is pretty good property and those who have large stocks on hand will undoubtedly turn over neat penny before spring.

COFFEE.—Coffee market is still steady but demand is not heavy. One wholesaler pointed out he had anticipated a sharper advance after last week's weakness. He pointed out that in his opinion the trusts had secured the monopoly and that it was just question of time before they started to force prices up and keep them at high levels. The outcome of this is being watched with interest.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Jan. 23.—Market during week has seen a tendency to firmness in several commodities and some interesting developments are looked forward to in near future. Business is on the mend and more encouraging reports are being received of trade during past week. Flour, sugar, lard and beans are some of the articles listed with grocers here as being much firmer, and sales in all four lines is brisk.

Advices to local wholesalers are to effect that there will be no change in immediate future in either Manitoba or Ontario patents, but with price of coming wheat quite strong, there is nothing to warrant decline.

Local merchants also say that sugar has about reached bottom and that depression which has marked it of late has not been warranted by statistics. Because of the shortage in the crop of last year, it is regarded as quite possible that higher prices may soon prevail. The market is reported unsteady.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

HALIFAX, Jan. 24.—Wholesale grocery dealers report business continues good in most lines. Since drop in price of sugar there has been considerable increase in sales. Extra standard granulated is quoted at $5.60 and United Empire at $5.40.

There is better demand for canned goods and price is firmer for most lines. There is a considerable scarcity of tomatoes in local market. Sales of peas are reported to be quite heavy.

Local dealers are now importing large quantities of poultry from upper Canadian points. Dealers report sales good, despite the high prices.

Eggs are now coming on the market in better supply and the price is a little easier. Choice new laid eggs are selling at 31 cents, but dealers report sales light. Butter continues firm. Only small quantities are arriving, and there is sale for all stock offering. Creamery prints are selling at 31 cents, and dairy in tubs at 27 cents. Sales of cheese are heavy at 16 for large and 16½ cents for twins.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SITUATION.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 26.—Heavy snowstorms in the Rockies interfered much with delivery of supplies to wholesalers on the coast last week. Snow started in just after Christmas and continued falling off and on until few days ago. Then a Chinook swept through the mountains and several slides came down. Track was blocked for such a time that over dozen trains were held up in the hills, including three or four passenger trains. No accidents of any account took place. Wholesalers were quite out in several lines, and there was no way of replenishing except by rush order from San Francisco. There was no relief even in that, for by the time goods could have come north, the trains would have got through and into Vancouver. Consequently the merchants waited.

Potatoes are still reasonable in price. For two or three years past price toward spring has gone up, and last fall several dealers put in supplies in anticipation of similar soaring this year. It is known that these supplies are on hand, and so far the price, while fairly stiff, has not started to ascend rapidly.

NEW COVER NEXT WEEK.

The Grocer's new cover will appear for the first time next week. Watch for your copy. In addition to this change there will be other new features which will make this issue one worth a careful study. The old green cover which has been used for the past quarter of a century is no more. Something better and more attractive succeeds it. See that you get your next week's copy.

ious co-operation, and works out not only for the good of the dealer but also for the patron.

Appreciate Collection Department.

Several letters were received by the secretary commending the work of the recently-established collection department. This is not yet on a paying basis, but what has been done so far is highly satisfactory, and beyond the expectations of the association. A feature that tends to its ultimate success is the forwarding each morning of the amounts collected the day previous. With many collection agencies, payment is made once a month. In this instance, the grocer gets his money once it is received and can at once have the use of it.

POISON NOT IN CANNED GOODS.

Case Published in Newspaper Investigated—Family Had Eaten No Canned Goods Whatever.

Toronto, Jan. 25.—On Jan. 15 there appeared an item in a local morning paper to the effect that a family were made ill through eating canned goods containing poisonous substance. The heading of the item ran "Ate Canned Goods, Family Stricken," and further on the article read:—"Before retiring Saturday night, they had consumed a small amount of canned goods, which had evidently become poisonous."

As with many of these alleged sicknesses caused from ptomaine poisoning, in eating canned goods there has been found to be no truth in above. The matter has been investigated and the cause of illness discovered to be contaminated flour and not canned goods at all. Dr. Geo. W. Graham, who was the doctor consulted, states that so far as he knew the family had eaten no canned goods whatever and he was at a loss to explain how the paper in question secured its information.

Facts of this nature can be used by grocers to dissipate the prejudice existing in minds of some against this staple article of diet. The National Canners' Association have investigated 150 alleged cases of ptomaine poisoning and did not find a single one where so-called poisoning could be traced to canned goods.

A. P. Tippet, of A. P. Tippet & Co., Montreal, has left for the Old Country on a business and pleasure trip.

Mr. A. H. MacLean, has left for the Canadian West where he will represent Holbrooks, Limited, in Saskatchewan.

Quarter Century Greeting

To The Grocery Trade

It is twenty-five years ago this month since our business was started, and while in many ways it does not seem a long time to look back over, yet many, many changes have taken place during that period, although a number of merchants who commenced with us at that time we are still proud to have with us as customers, and hope to have them for many years to come.

When beginning we adopted certain rules of procedure and principles which have been maintained ever since. Sometimes these have had to be upheld at a heavy cost, but we have come through with them, and if on occasions there has not been much money in it, there has at least been a heap of satisfaction. We should like to feel that we have been of some use to the Trade in general and that it has been the better of our having had an existence, and this shall continue to be our main aim. We thank you for your very generous patronage in the past and hope for a continuance in the future.

Use of Wood Fixtures in Show Window

Value of Dressing the Window Regularly and Attractively—One Article at a Time or Associated Articles Should be Displayed—A Sure Business Getter.

Whether you want it or not, your windows will either attract or repel every one who passes them. A person is attracted by a clean, well-kept window, just as he is by a well dressed man or woman, and one will hesitate to enter a store with a dirty window, just as he will hesitate to shake hands with a dirty tramp—probably he will avoid it altogether.

The very best advertising space you can buy is being paid for, every time you pay rent. It can be made to earn more than any other space in the store. You are wasteful and extravagant, if you do not make it earn all it can.

Getting New Customers.

The patronage of a grocery store is necessarily largely in its immediate neighborhood, hence most of the people who are passing your store are possible customers, and many who may not be regular customers, will become casual customers, by the attraction of some article in the window which catches their fancy.

Wood Fixtures that can be Used for Window Displays.

Every grocer knows that if he could take time to mention a few seasonable articles to each customer as he waits on her, it would effect a marked increase in his sales.

Why not use your windows to offer these suggestions? They will catch the eye of the customer the clerk is waiting on, as well as the favored customers to whom you are giving your personal attention. It will also reach the passing customer of your competitor to whom you do not often get a chance to speak at all.

One Thing to a Window.

To make the most of show windows, care must be used in selecting the goods to be displayed in them. It would take more genius than most of us possess to make a miscellaneous jumble of everything in the store to attract anybody. Either a single article should be displayed, or only articles which are related to each other. Marshall Field & Co. have probably the finest show windows in the world and thousands of dollars are spent to provide attractive backgrounds and settings.

They follow the principle of one thing to a window closely. If the most expensive show windows in the country can be used to the best advantage in this way, it is a pretty good lead for others to follow.

Nearly every possible customer will have passed a grocer's windows in the course of a week. Therefore a window display may be said to be worked out at the end of a week. Another reason for changing window displays frequently, is that the goods become soiled and faded and when put back on the shelves their freshness is likely to be questioned. It should be the practice to change window displays every week on whatever day and whatever hour is the most idle help.

Use of Wood Fixtures.

The accompanying illustration shows how a window display can be made of groceries, with the aid of wood window fixtures. Anyone can put up such a display as this in a short time. If the grocer will spend five minutes in placing the fixtures he can safely leave the arrangement of the packages to the clerk.

An attractive modification of this display would be some of the things with which macaroni and spaghetti are prepared, such as cheese, tomatoes, either fresh or canned, etc.

One advantage of these fixtures is that each week a display can be arranged entirely different from the one before, the whole appearance of the window can be changed by changing the arrangement of the fixtures.

RAISINS AND GELATINE.

Prince Edward Island Dealer Inquires Re Their Manufacture.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—Will you explain in The Grocer, the process of making raisins. Would also like to know what composes gelatine.

ENQUIRER.

Summerside, P.E.I.

Editorial Note.—Raisins are simply dried grapes. Only those grapes of a fleshy variety which develop abundant saccharine matter are suitable.

The California process of making raisins is simple. The grapes as picked are placed on trays which when filled are conveyed to the drying ground, consisting merely of a large vacant track, no appliances being necessary to the curing process, sunshine being the only agency employed. Since there are no dews there, the raisin trays are left out day and night until curing is completed. They are then removed to the sweat-room which is built as air tight as possible, where they become equalized in the degree of dryness and are ready for packing, some as they are, others being seeded.

While in most producing countries, the raisins are dried in the sun, around Denia, Spain, a big producing section, this cannot be done on account of climatic changes. The grapes there are dipped into lye, made by dissolving the alkali out of wood ashes and quicklime with water and then adding a pint of olive oil and a handful of salt to each four gallons.

Making of Gelatine.

Gelatines are made by various processes from gelatinous animal substances, such as the cartilages, tendons, membranes, clippings off skins, bones and horns of animals, fish scales, etc., in much the same way as glue is made. The material is usually boiled and treated with acetic and sulphuric acids, skimmed, strained, refined and purified.

Under the Adulteration Act of Canada, gelatine is the purified, dried, inodorous product of the hydrolysis, by treatment with boiling water of certain tissues, as skins, ligaments and bones from sound animals and contains not more than 2 per cent. of ash and not less than 15 per cent. of nitrogen.

Lesson 10--Complete Course in Cardwriting

The Last Lesson on Brush Stroke Numerals — Speedy Price Ticket Styles Taught in the Edwards Short Cut System—Important Points to Observe.

(By J. C. Edwards.—Copyright, Canada, 1911.)

The call for the speedily-made price ticket to-day, is an urgent one, and must be heeded. Hundreds of stores all over the country use price tickets when they feel that show cards are too expensive a luxury.

The price ticket is a silent salesman and one needs only to parade to the city stores, the town stores and even the rural merchandising centres to find out to what extent this is true.

The department card is most valuable and varies in size from 1-8 which is Show-card, Showing Application of Brush Stroke Roman.

7 inches by 11 inches to the ¼ size (11 x 14 inches). The favorite way of writing the department card, whether it is used with lettering or just a price, is the "landscape" or in other words having the inscription running the long way of the card. This is the reverse to the card illustrated here, which is written in panel style, and will be referred to in the future in this course as such.

Price Tickets and How to Write Them.

We will deal exclusively in this lesson with department price tickets and will go into individual ticketing in lessons on pen lettering. The quarter size card is used to the best advantage in departments where large articles are displayed, such as piles of underwear, dress goods, in fact, almost any kind of goods except small articles where a great number of cards are needed, and would hide the display.

The inscription must always be written in the centre of the card with the price the most prominent, where the price is the main feature, but, where the price is only secondary, the name of the goods or whatever other phrasing be used, should be the most pronounced.

The cent mark should follow the price when the price is in cents only and the dollar sign should always precede the price when it represents dollars only. But where the price is in both dollars and cents neither mark is absolutely necessary; though it is advisable to use the dollar mark. Never use a decimal in front of a price such as .35—write it "35c."

In referring to the plate showing the two styles of prices, the straight Roman and the speedy slant Roman, we might draw attention to the slight difference in make-up of the two. You will notice, in the first place, that in the straight style, the spurs are pronounced, whereas in the slant style the absence of spurs is very noticeable. Spurs take time and when they are omitted greater speed is acquired.

The figure one in either case is only different as far as the angle of the stroke is concerned; "2" in the slant Roman has only three strokes while, in the straight, it practically represents four. Two strokes are saved in the "3," three strokes are saved in the "4;" there are three strokes less in "5" in the slant Roman than in the straight. This is quite a saving and enables one to gather more speed, for "5" is a very common figure in every day price tickets.

The "6," as in the "9," means a slight saving in the slant as compared with the straight style of lettering, but the eight, in both cases, is practically the same. The "0," too, has only two strokes in both styles. However, it can readily be seen that the latter style of numeral is planned with the idea to attaining greater speed. The slanting tendency of this lettering, as has been spoken of previously, tends to create speed owing to the natural instinct of the writer to follow the earlier teaching in handwriting.

A very important point to be observed in writing cards with a price is this. Never write a card with a slanting price when the lettering above slants; always use the straight price and for any card with lettering at all we advise the use of the straight price only. The slanting style of numeral is adapted more for use on price tickets. This is not a hard and fast rule in cardwriting, but the outcome of years of experience in actual card-writing and one that the author adhered to rigidly in later years. There is strength in contrast, as you will find by experimenting.

The accompanying show card, though rather exaggerated in its statement, shows the use of the capitals anl lower case letters of the Roman and the speedy slant lower case letters along with the straight and slant figures.

The form of decoration is simple and easily executed; crude in fact, but effective. This is made more pronounced in the accompanying card than it would be in an actual card. For the purpose of illustrating, some delicate tint, such as grey, mauve or blue should be used.

Take a small quantity of white paint, mix in a slight quantity of blue (dry, or wet with mucilage), add a touch of red and work up thoroughly. Blue should predominate if purple is desired, but if a pale mauve shade is required, soften with more white. Don't forget that practice and experiment are the great teachers in card writing as in every other line.

Don't be afraid to waste paint; it is cheap. Try to improve on every letter, speed will come later.

Grocers Should Sell Bags for Cooking

System of Paper Bag Cookery Creating Widespread Interest —Dealers Who Handle These Bags Will Have Splendid Advertisement Working for Them—All Natural Food Flavors Retained.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—(Special.) — The new method of cooking food in paper bags, referred to in last week's issue, is an idea that should not be overlooked by Canadian dealers. The bag itself is exactly of the same shape as that in which your hatter delivers a new derby. It is made in larger and smaller sizes for use according to the quantity of the food to be prepared. The material from which it is made is purely vegetable, a fact that assures no foreign taste being added to the food. The points in favor of paper bag cookery are numerous and are worthy of the grocer's consideration.

It is a money saver. The paper bag saves money in the household because it prevents a loss in the weight of the article cooked. This pertains particularly to roasts, for it is a well known fact that in the present way of cooking there is a loss in the actual weight of the meat as the result of its stay in the oven. The paper bag is not affected by water, and grease does not damage it in the oven. Any grocer can satisfy himself on this score by a test; he knows there is a loss of substance and weight by the odor that finds its way from the kitchen during the process of cooking. The housewife will be grateful for the reason that the oven is not spattered with grease, and there is not the usual pans, etc., to clean.

Natural Essences Retained.

But the main advantage is in the taste of the food. It has been thoroughly cooked and has retained its natural essences and flavor. Some of the best restaurants have regular paper bag cookery dishes, and the success of the new idea in cuisine is evidenced by the demand for these specially prepared foods. It must be remembered that the bag is sealed after the food has been put in it. Thus, as the air in the bag becomes heated in the oven the food is cooked in the odor it gives off. There is no loss, and there is no foreign taste added. It is a splendid system of cooking food when one really appreciates what is accomplished.

A few weeks ago a number of business men in Montreal enjoyed a meal the principal articles of which had been prepared by the paper bag method. First there was soup, following which came lamb chop, peas, potatoes and gravy. The various courses were served to the individuals in the bags in which the food had been cooked. It was a [illegible] example of what can be accomplished by this new idea.

The system is simple, it is a money saver, it lessens labor in the household, and especially does it give food a splendid taste unknown to those who have not tried it.

Grocery Trade Should Handle It.

The retail grocer is undoubtedly the best medium by which the public can be reached. Women are going in and out of the grocery stores of the country day after day, and any idea new to the household is bound to receive their attention. The paper bag for cooking purposes will attract them, for it is directly connected with the goods they are buying, and for the special reason that it is cheap and within the means of all.

Newspapers throughout this and other countries have adopted paper bags as an advertising medium. They have doubtless realized that women will surely adopt this system where possible, and for this same reason the paper bags should appeal to grocers as a new medium either for advertising or for regular retailing. It must be remembered that the new idea is still in its infancy. It made its appearance in England—the home of good cooks—where it was received unanimously. It has come to Canada and is beginning to make itself known.

A number of wholesale fruit houses in Calgary, Alta., have formed an association and appointed a buyer to purchase in bulk the requirements of the several firms belonging to it.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR RETAILERS.

The Edward C. Plume Co., Chicago, Ill., have issued a "1912 Grocery Service" book. This book contains 70 illustrated advertisements for the retail grocer, each with blanks allowing for lists of goods and prices of individual dealers, and their names and addresses.

KEEPING FROST FROM WINDOWS.

Two More Dealers Give Their Methods—What Wire Screen Will Do.

Frosted windows have been the subject of many a discussion during the past couple of weeks on account of the bitter cold weather all over Canada.

Some weeks ago The Grocer published methods for preventing frosted windows and following are two more methods, one of which is similar in principle to that of Wm. Hyndman, of Smith's Falls, Ont., and the other something original.

One comes from Meaford, Ont., and is explained in this letter:—

Editor Canadian Grocer.—Kindly convey following to writer of article in Dec. 8 issue re keeping frost from store windows.

I have experimented along that line with a little improvement I think. I had a double window made about the same with two light pieces of glass with felt around three ends. These were screwed to the window frame outside. I had also an extra piece about 4 inches wide with a strip of rubber on the inside next the plate glass. This was screwed on original frame above the storm window which I drew out so as to cause a pressure on the rubber and plate glass. This improves the putty plan.

The window was frozen over when the storm window was put on but at once began to clear away. It did clear and has remained clear since, while my other window is frozen completely over.

I shall have another made next week.

Thanking the writer of the former article and your kindness,

R. S. GODFREY.

Meaford, Ont., Jan. 12.

Effect of Wire Screen.

A Renfrew reader submits something new as a prevention for frosted windows. Here is his letter which explains itself:

Editor Canadian Grocer.—A short time ago in the Canadian Grocer you gave a description of a double window to keep frost off store windows. Here is another way which is simple and inexpensive and much better than a frozen up window.

Make a light frame full width of window and three feet high or more. Cover this with wire same as used on screen doors; fasten this to outside of window 1½ inches from glass and fasten so that it may be removed in mild weather. This will not remove frost from window but if put on before frost forms it will stay off. It is 27 degrees below to-day and no frost on my window.

Experiences in Automobile Delivery

As an Advertisement to Demonstrate Quick Delivery it is Considered Good Asset—Cleanliness is Another Feature in its Favor—Comparison of Cost of Maintenance with that of Horse and Waggon.

The automobile as a means of delivery for the grocer and general merchant is no longer an experiment. It has gone through the test and has proven its worth.

The change to the horseless method of delivery in Canada has been gradual but that it is steadily gaining ground is readily noted. Not alone in recent years have city merchants been installing this method, but country dealers in considerable numbers have also come to recognize its merits.

Once Used Always Liked.

A prominent feature is the fact that merchants who have once used the automobile in delivery are strong in their praise of it and declare they would not want to go back to the old method again. Another feature is that numerous large firms could be enumerated who have started conservatively by the purchase of one car only and have been so well pleased with results that they have steadily increased the number and discarded the horses and wagons altogether.

To the dealer uncertain as to the outcome, the first cost presents an item about which he is a little timid. Then again he is not as well acquainted with the cost of maintenance of a car as with horse delivery.

Wouldn't Change to Former Method.

F. Simpson and Sons, grocers, 736 Yonge street, Toronto, is one firm thoroughly convinced that automobile delivery is the "only" method. In their opinion the horse and wagon is antiquated. The statement of this firm that even if the cost of automobile delivery were more than that of horse delivery they would still stick to it and believe they would make money by so doing is worth noting. When a man puts in a silent salesman in place of an old counter, he does not save anything in expenditure, but he makes a great deal by it. Spending money to make money is not a new thing with progressive merchants.

Speed, advertising value and cleanliness are considered the three big features which the automobile has, in the opinion of the Simpson management.

Operating Three Machines.

They believe the automobile can perform twice the work that can be done by a horse and wagon and consider the three automobiles which they now have do as much delivering as six horses and they do it more quickly. The rapidity with which deliveries may be made is one of the strong points in its favor.

The automobile also possesses considerable advertising power. Anything that improves the service given by a store is an advertisement Such is the automobile. The Simpson store emphasize the motor delivery feature by a cut of

"See This, Aunt Em'ly."

"Don't that look good? Jell-O for you. Made it all by myself."

The main reason why Jell-O moves from the store shelves so smoothly and briskly is the housewife's appreciation of the easy Jell-O way of making desserts.

A child can make up desserts, and one can be made in a minute.

"Nothing like Jell-O for dessert" is the dinner watchword in several million American homes.

There are seven Jell-O flavors.

three automobiles placed in their advertising space.

Cleanliness counts also. The Simpson cars have closed-in bodies keeping the goods while in transit free from dust and dirt. They say: "The man working around a horse is hardly in a position to handle food products. The auto removes this."

Comparison of Costs.

Here is how the automobile delivery of J. Ingham, Jr., St. Lawrence market, Toronto, compares with horse delivery. He considers that his one automobile does the work of two hrses. He has had his car over a year. It is of the hard tire type and cost him $1,000:—

Maintenance, wagons, per week—

Two delivery men at $10	$20.00
Two horses' keep at $3.50	7.00
	$27.00

Maintenance, auto, per week—

One delivery man	$13.50
Repairs, gasoline, etc.	7.50
	$21.00

Thus the automobile, according to his own figures, saves him $312 per year in delivery expense. Besides this there are the benefits of quicker delivery, allowing a larger district to be taken in, advertising value, etc., which cannot be reduced to a matter of dollars and cents, but which are nevertheless considerable.

The maintenance of the machine includes repairs, gasoline, oil as well as rent at a garage. The amount varies a great deal each month, but an average taken on a year's total shows it to be about $1.25 per day.

Butter and Cheese Continue Firm

Strength in Butter Market Under Light Stocks Well Maintained—Small Stocks of Cheese Generally Held — Storage Eggs Firm With Demand Good—New Laids Showing Slight Increase in Production—Outlook of Hog Industry in Canada as Viewed by Live Stock Commissioner.

Butter possesses all strong features as outlined last week and prices have moved upward in sympathy at many centres. Stocks as well as deliveries are light, accounting for present tendency. In the United States, values are on high level and buyers from across the line have been foraging in Canadian territory for supplies.

Cheese has certainly lost none of its steadiness which can be expected to continue under general light stocks held.

Storage eggs continue to firm in price and several points report advances. The conservative stocks put away last summer have been frequently mentioned and the fact pointed out that with ascending prices across the line that nothing but a firming tendency could be expected. Such has been the case and values have been increasing. Same is true in United States markets and some Canadian interests who bought eggs in the United States market last fall have resold them to United States buyers at good profit without taking them out of storage. New laids are showing slight increase in production and values for this variety are in come instances little above the figures asked for storage. The better demand which would consequently be expected in new laids is lacking.

Dr. J. G. Rutherford, live stock commissioner at Ottawa, declares there is a marked decrease in production of live stock as compared with greatly increased consumption. He views outlook with some degree of alarm. In reference to hogs he says:—

"Although the Canadian swine industry is recently showing some signs of recovery in Ontario from the serious depression which, as a result of low prices, overtook it several years ago, it is capable of an infinitely larger development than it has ever seen, he opined. In Quebec and the Maritime Provinces the pig industry has never received the attention which it merits, the production being far short of the actual requirements, whereas under proper conditions, he believed there could be a large surplus for export."

But in the western Provinces, especially the hog-raising branch of the live-stock industry has never been taken up with anything like the degree of interest or enthusiasm it warrants, in spite of the fact that, as Dr. Rutherford believes, with favorable marketing facilities, it is undoubtedly one of the best paying adjuncts of the grain farm.

This will by no means be a surprise to those who have been following our market comments. New laids range from 35c to 40c, slightly increased production being apparent. TO PREVENT MIXING MOLASSES.

A bill is before the legislature of Barbados which aims at prohibiting the blending of molasses in that country. It has been charged that molasses of a low grade was being mixed with choice and fancy and the resulting compound sold as Barbados molasses. The effect of this mixing was to cheapen the price of the article and render it less pure.

This is what the bill, which will most likely be passed, aims to prevent and enacts heavy penalties for exporting molasses into which vacuum pan molasses has entered.

Of the 154,000 puncheons of molasses exported from Barbados in the past two years, Canada received 105,000.

Competition Among Millers is Keen

Some Price Cutting in Flour by Mills Last Week—Underselling Also Prevalent in Rolled Oats—Due Perhaps to Large Milling Capacity in Canada—Much Larger Than Needed, Many Believe—Rolled Oats Firm—Retail Sales Are Brisk—Moderate Domestic Trade in Flour.

Competition for business both in flour and cereals is apparently keen. This was made evident in price cutting war which caused rolled oats prices to sag in the face of fairly steady market. Now it is flour. Reports came forward last week from Montreal that mills were underselling one another in this commodity. This latter condition seems to have been overcome for present and all mills are apparently quoting present prices. Still, the strong competition is made evident.

"Why these attempts to secure business in this manner?" one miller was asked. In reply he pointed to the large milling capacity in Canada, considerably larger than warranted, in his opinion. "The milling business in Canada was a good proposition a few years ago but there has certainly been no dearth of new entrants into the business in late years, and the milling capacity has been greatly increased, too much indeed, in my opinion."

Domestic trade in flour shows a fair average for the month. Foreign demand is good and bad in spots, sometimes not coming high enough to meet views of exporters. There are no special features to the market. The raw material holds steady. Considerable Manitoba wheat is being worked off for export.

In reference to flour, one miller states that owing to excessive moisture in the wheat on this crop, it requires a quarter of a bushel more of the high-grade wheat to make a barrel of flour as compared with last season.

WINNIPEG.

FLOUR.—Flour market continues to be active and good export as well as local demand is in existence. An interesting report was received from Minneapolis showing that a battle of wits between business men of the United States and Canada which had been going on in secrecy for the last four months had come to light by the announcement of W. P. Trickett, executive manager of the Minneapolis Traffic Association that Minneapolis was practically assured of shipping her flour to New York for 12c per 100 lbs. instead of 23c. The situation it is stated grew out of the announcement by the Canadian Government that it would build a railroad from the Hudson Bay to Winnipeg. This according to advices from New York would place the Canadian city 318 miles nearer Liverpool than New York. He also claimed that the new Trent Valley Canal now being built from Lake Ontario by the Canadians was indicated as another weapon by which Canada might deprive the States of her export flour trade. Local millers when asked about this report stated that they had heard nothing new regarding the same and that they did not consider it was worth while worrying themselves over until something definite was announced.

Strong Potato Situation in Canada

Firmer and Higher at Many Centres—General Stocks Being Rapidly Reduced—N. B. Dealer's Ideas Firmer—Imports of English and Irish Stocks—High in U. S. Also—Marmalade Oranges Arrive—Show Good Quality—Oranges Have Been Dull—A Suggested Reason.

With passing of the extremely cold weather which hampered fruit and vegetable business throughout Canada for a time and the arrival of more moderate temperature during the week, trade has again reverted to normal. The milder weather which set in during past week afforded wholesalers an opportunity of clearing the decks of held up orders. Trade is now expected to settle down to good steady movement.

Marmalade or bitter oranges have made their appearance on Canadian markets. The quality is quite satisfactory and a good trade should follow. The crop is reported about similar to last year in volume and prices are ranging at about same level. Trade in navel oranges is inclined to dullness although the fruit is showing up well in quality now. Some dealers are of opinion that rush of somewhat immature green fruit to market for the Christmas trade has turned the consuming public against this line. The market is slightly easier.

The strong potato situation as pointed out last week continues and higher values in this commodity rule at many centres. General stocks are apparently being rapidly reduced to low point. Supplies throughout Ontario are small. In New Brunswick, stocks are pretty well out of farmers' hands and holders' ideas are firm. Imports are being made of English and Irish potatoes which will rule at about the same price as New Brunswick. Some shipments of Irish potatoes to Canadian markets were diverted to U.S. markets at higher prices. The situation is strong across the line and such large imports have been made necessary that a bill has been introduced at Washington to temporarily lift the duty of 25c per bushel. If this bill passes, U.S. dealers will without doubt come into Canada to make purchases, thus lending even greater strength to the market.

Celery continues high. Canadian onions are scarce. Cabbage displays firmness. Imported strawberries hold high.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS.—Bitter or marmalade oranges have arrived and appear to be making satisfactory start. The quality of the first arrivals is good, which should encourage merchants to get behind this line. They come in 176's and 200's and are quoted at $2.50 to $2.75 per case.

Table oranges are not moving briskly, having been inclined to quietness since the passing of the big holiday demand. Lemons are meeting with a moderate demand while Almeria grapes, of which there is no overplus of supplies, are moving quite well.

Situation in apples is quite different from year ago when supplies were scant and prices sky high. At present time, offerings are quite plentiful while trade could not be described as brisk.

Further shipments of strawberries are coming from Florida at fancy prices. Some rhubarb is also offering this week.

VEGETABLES.—Tendency in potatoes was quite clearly defined last week. This week dealers are quoting advance of 10 to 15 cents per bag. New Brunswick stock ruling at $1.75 and Ontario at $1.60. The conservative amount held locally and the smallness of offerings is reason assigned for the advance. As mentioned last week holders' ideas in New Brunswick are firmer. There are those who predict still higher values for this commodity and dealers who look for the $2 mark to be reached before many weeks are not wanting.

California celery is on the market and as pointed out would be the case is high being quoted at $7 per case of 6½ to 8 dozen. New lettuce, radish and green onions are also adorning the local market and with mushrooms, hot house tomatoes and sweet potatoes makes a nice line of specialties to handle.

Fish - Oysters

Looks Like Firmer Tendency in Fish

Storms on Eastern Coast Seriously Interfered With Fishing —Opinion Expressed That This Will Work for Lighter Supplies and Consequently Firmer Prices—Weather Favorable For Trade.

Storms of past few weeks on eastern coast have interfered seriously with shore fisheries. That this may work for firmer tendency in price in period ahead is the opinion of more than one dealer. The catch of fish during January has been particularly small. Fresh supplies have been so small that even at eastern points storage stocks have had to be resorted to. Already on the eastern markets there has been some slight firming and with period of heavy demand, including the Lenten season ahead, it is probable that higher prices on frozen fish and possibly on some smoked lines may result. Lobster fishermen lost much gear in the storms and both live lobster shippers and canners have as a consequence been unable to get supplies.

Weather has been favorable for trade and a good volume of business is reported throughout the Dominion. Oysters are moving fairly well.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—Dealers are beginning to pay more attention to fish owing to the approach of Lent and wholesalers find the demand a little heavier. Prices remain steady, only a few changes having taken place during the week.

TORONTO.—An important feature to the market is the severe storms that have been prevailing on the eastern Candian coast, interfering seriously with the catch of fish. It has been hinted by several dealers that this will work for higher prices on frozen lines during the period ahead. So short has been the supply of fresh fish that eastern markets themselves have had to resort to frozen stock, while it is quite evident that stocks of frozen will be smaller than if fish were now being caught for their marketing.

Extra smelts locally are quoted at 17 cents and No. 1 at 10 cents per pound. Fillets are very scarce and firmer in price. Trout, however, is fairly plentiful and there are said to be good stocks of dry cod lines held. Stocks of halibut are quite conservative, with the outlook by no means rosy.

Weather has been favorable and trade has been generally brisk.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—Storms have played havoc with fisheries on Nova Scotia coast during past week. Receipts have been unusually small. None of the inshore bank fleet that make the market each week, landed any fish, and in consequence storage stocks had to be brought out.

The lobster fishery has been temporarily paralyzed. Only a few dozen lobsters have been marketed. The fishermen have sustained heavy losses to their gear, and it will be some time before they can get traps in shape again. Shipments from coastal points to United States market have been practically nil. There is also marked scarcity of lobsters at Portland, Gloucester and Boston. Fish is in good demand and some dealers say that this is due to the continued advance in price of beef. Cod, haddock and smelts are about the only fresh fish offering.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—Stocks of fish in St. John markets are just sufficient to cope with local consumption. Sever cold and the blowy, stormy weather of past week have had their effect in preventing many fishermen from going about their favorite grounds, and hence the market has not been plentifully supplied. Their nets and traps have also been damaged in some places along the coast of Bay of Fundy by heavy winds and storms and in some instances the loss in this way has been considerable.

Smelt fishing in the Kennebecasis, which is one of main sources of local supply about this time of year, has not been so good as in former years, there having been quite a falling off lately. But it is in fresh fish that the dealers feel the effects of the bad weather most forcibly. Haddock are scarce, and lobsters have not been known to be so scanty for many months. In fact, so much is this the case that from many bay townships reports are to the effect that the men have abandoned the work of fishing through discouragement for a time.

CANADIAN TEA CONSUMPTION.

The consumption of tea in Canada in 1910 was 34,259,000 lbs. While this showed an increase, it fell behind that of 1909 in point of consumption per capita. A feature is that the amount consumed per capita in Canada measures well up with the other countries, being next to the United Kingdom. The consumption per head in the United States is only .89 lbs. as compared with 4.34 in Canada.

The Dominion Molasses Co., Halifax, N.S., have installed one of the latest can filling machines. It has a capacity for 1,000 cans of molasses an hour.

that every time a customer asks you for Fish and you say "I don't keep any," you are giving him or her reason to say, "Well, you should," and good sound reason, too. Fish, Mr. Grocer, should be given a fair place in your displays, especially now that Lenten times are beginning to show up in the distance.

Delivery System Works Like Clockwork

Method Used by Jno. Carpenter, Hamilton, Ont., to Deliver With Least Time and Trouble—Has Been in Business in One District for 33 Years—Big Sale for Baskets—How He Advertises.

Hamilton, Jan. 25.—(Special.)—It was in 1878 that Jno. O. Carpenter opened a grocery store on Market Square. That was before the city had grown to the size where its competitors designated it the "Ambitious City." Since then it has steadily been on the increase, and the business which Mr. Carpenter started a third of a century ago has indeed kept pace with the advancement of the city. While he has found it necessary at times with the increase in business to change his location and enlarge his store, he still remains within the boundaries of the place where the citizens gather to barter with the farmers who come from miles around with their supplies of butter, eggs, vegetables and other farm commodities. Indeed, Hamilton has a market which other centres well might envy. During the summer months, it was a scene of activity both night and day.

Location Serves Double Purpose.

Thus has location shaped the trade of the Carpenter store, which is endowed with a goodly portion of both farm and city customers. He secures the trade of the farmers who come there to sell produce, and also of the city people who come there to purchase what the farmers have to offer.

Mr. Carpenter takes advantage of opportunities that present themselves. The farmer's wife is frequently in need of a basket in which to bring her produce to market, and will generally go to the nearest store to purchase them when in town. The city wife comes to the market to purchase, and perhaps also finds the need of a basket. Thus, did Mr. Carpenter find an opportunity for a side line that gave a good profit, and also attracted people to the store. He carries a big assortment of baskets of all kinds. He is perhaps the only grocer here who sells the German basket, and he finds large sale for them.

Studied Delivery Problem.

He has not been in business for 33 years without fully recognizing the value of delivery—a big link in the chain of service. Not alone does he give his customer a good delivery service, but he aims to do it by the best system possible.

In the first place, he has a folding delivery box, which saves a good deal of space when not in use. While on the delivery route, when the parcels have been delivered to a customer, the box is folded up and placed out of the way. It folds by the bottom swinging up, the four corners being on pivots.

The box is also equipped with handles cut into the ends, and bears the name and address. When one of these boxes is placed on top of another they lock together in a simple manner. This allows many more to be placed in the delivery wagon, and being held tightly together, there is not the same shaking or rocking as if they were separate.

There is another advantage. While the writer was in the store, the driver locked four of these boxes together, and was able to carry the four out to the wagon, thus saving time. If they had been separate, four trips would have been necessary.

Boxes All Numbered.

But this is not all the system. Each box bears a number, being marked consecutively from 1 to 50. The driver takes the bill of the first customer on the route. She is No. 1. That is the number on her bill, and her goods are put in box No. 1. Then he goes on to No. 2, whose goods are placed in box No. 2. When he stops at house of customer No. 1, all he has to do is to take the box bearing that number. He delivers the goods, folds the box up, puts it out of the way and goes on to No. 2. He does not have to examine all the boxes in order to find the right one, but merely refers to the number. Thus is the delivery carried on like clockwork.

Goods Checked Off.

The goods of one customer only are placed in each box. In placing them in the box, they are checked off with the bill, preventing the possibility of starting out without all a customer's purchase.

Has Two Refrigerators.

Mr. Carpenter believes in fixtures to facilitate work of the store or which help selling goods. In the centre of the store is a display refrigerator showing meats, cheese, peanut butter, etc. At the rear he has another refrigerator for butter.

Drawer spice receptacles maintain the strength of his spices and also keep them free from dust. Below these are swinging bins in which sugar, cereals and kindred bulk lines are kept. Nearer to the front below the ledge are tea canisters, which keep the air and dust from this beverage.

Among other fixtures may be seen a bag holder, electric fan, cash register, computing scales, electric coffee mill, cheese cutter and meat slicer, all of which he claims have their place in the grocery store, and are articles which eventually pay for themselves in allowing work to be done more quickly, better, and with more satisfaction to the customer.

Uses the Newspapers.

In a city it is a somewhat difficult problem to decide what is the best method of advertising. For the reason that newspaper space is held at high rates, some dealers believe that this method is not profitable. Mr. Carpenter is, however, a steady user of the daily paper. The space he uses is not large, but he keeps consistently at it, which he believes is better than a splurge once in a while and no advertising between.

For space about an inch in depth, single column, he pays $150 per year, but he says it is a profitable investment. He does not put in a mere "card" and allow it to continue without change, but each day presents something new to readers.

SOLD CANDLES IN COLD WEATHER

Toronto, Jan. 25.—(Special.)—It's an ill wind that does not blow some one some good. Such is the belief of at least one grocer, who took full advantage of the recent cold snap to help along sales. Anticipating that the cold weather would freeze up the gas pipes of many householders, as has been known on past cold occasions, he prepared for a big demand for candles, which he believed would naturally follow. While he generally carries only one box at a time, he stocked up with ten boxes. The sales developed, and he cleaned them all up with a considerable added profit.

This same grocer, whenever there is a snow storm, places a bundle of brooms at the front door. They are in big demand for sweeping following a storm, and he tries to attract the trade for them to his store.

All grocers may not be in a position to profit by such opportunities, but the point which is wished to be impressed on the dealer is that he should always be on the lookout for opportunities and take full advantage of them to swell sales and profits.

Carl Webb, Oxford, N.S., had opened a grocery and dry goods store in the Wood-Patton block. On the right side of the entrance the groceries and canned goods are neatly arranged, and on the opposite side is the dry goods.

The Best Proposition!

Looked at any way you please, no line of goods holds out the same inducements to the Grocer as

UPTON'S
Jams, Jellies and Marmalade

First, they are made from the finest fruits in the world---Canadian Fruits---selected by experts and preserved and bottled in an up-to-date, sanitary factory, which is a model of cleanliness. Second, the "Upton" line never 'sticks,' because our extensive consumer advertising has created a demand for these goods; and third, selling "Upton's" specialties invariably leaves a satisfaction and profit-margin behind that makes trading a pleasure.

Are you featuring "Upton's"? If not, fall in line with the 'wise' ones.

Better Be Safe Than Sorry

Quick reference.

Less than a year ago a young fellow walked into one of our offices and announced that he was about to engage in the grocery business and that he wanted to purchase some sales books. Our salesman requested permission to demonstrate the Keith Account System, the use of which would shorten his work of keeping customers' accounts, eliminating the possibility of mixing or losing charges and give him full protection against loss by fire. He replied that he could not afford to purchase such a system at the outset, as his capital was small and was needed to properly develop his business, although the benefit of the system was apparent. After explaining to him, however, how he could pay for the system with the money it would save him, he gave us his order and a Keith Account System was installed in his store.

One night several months later, his store was discovered on fire and before it could be extinguished his stock of goods was completely destroyed, and his customers' accounts in the Keith Account System were all that were saved. As his whole capital was invested in stock, it was only by saving his accounts that he was able to resume business. (Name and address on request.)

THE KEITH ACCOUNT SYSTEM

ONE WRITING : SELF INDEXING : FIRE PROOF

Do you, as this merchant did, feel that you can't afford to buy The Keith Account System? Would your accounts be saved if your store burned to-night? Ask yourself these questions, then obey that impulse to write us and tell you how the Keith Account System will pay for itself with the money it saves. You won't obligate yourself.

Auto Delivery Curtails Delivery Expenses

Service is one of the main features which determines a merchant's patronage, with delivery the most important part. Merchants are more and more beginning to realize the many points in favor of automobile delivery, because it brings them more business and because it is cheaper than any other method.

The Menard Commercial Car

has been designed to meet the demand, and is a quiet car of great reliability, reasonable speed, with a large reserve of power and a frame of strength and size capable of carrying a load of considerable bulk and up to 1500 lbs. weight.

The design of tires used on the Menard Commercial Cars reduces the cost of maintaining tires to a nominal sum. There are many other features of the Menard that will impress it upon merchants for its superiority above all others.

A Common Sense Appeal

A great many houses are offering large discounts on tea. Others say they have special values in teas bought before the advance in price. What does this mean? As the advances in price have been going on for over six months, it means that they have old tea to offer you.

Do you not know that Ceylon teas will deteriorate fully a cent, and sometimes more, in six months? It is as essential to the welfare of a retailer's trade that he give his customers fresh tea as that he supply them with fresh butter, and yet so many of the half-pounds of tea we have bought from time to time from different grocers show great age---some of them being at least two years old. Any one can tell this at once from the flavor.

Buy "SALADA" and you get fresh tea, and if it does not sell we take it back, pay the freight both ways and give you your money back.

Does this not appeal to your common sense?

Foods in Packages and Extravagance

Financial Post Raises Debatable Question—Can Consumer Who Purchases Package Goods be Considered Extravagant?—Manufacturers Point to Quality, Uniformity, Reputation and Sanitary Condition of Goods Under Separate Cover.

Under date of January 27, The Financial Post of Canada, in an article on the business outlook, makes some references on the cost of living, of interest to the grocery trade. Here is a paragraph:—

Another feature that does not look right is the excessive height to which food products are continuing to go. There are several causes. One of them is short production, while there is at the same time a better demand owing to increasing population, and also to increasing wealth. The latter is, however, the interesting fact. Grocery houses, for example, notice that even the less well-to-do classes of the community are now demanding, for example, package food, where formerly they bought the bulk product. This tendency toward extravagance is perhaps to be expected when the country is so prosperous, but it is at the same time one of the danger marks. Clothing, furs, and the like, have also made very rapid price advances in the last while. The demand is insistent. The knitted goods factories, for example, are running night and day, while in various lines they are unable to cope with the demand. Within the last week or so, for instance, no less than three additional firms have gone into the manufacture of sweater coats.

Does the use of package goods indicate extravagance on the part of the consuming public?

It is a debatable question The Financial Post has raised, according to manufacturers. It will not be admitted by manufacturers who put their goods up in package form that a consumer can be considered extravagant who purchases such goods.

The fact stands that there has been a wonderful change from bulk to package goods within the past decade or two. Goods are now sold in package form, which a few years ago were never dreamed of. To-day we have such goods as package raisins, dates, mincemeat, plum pudding, spices, tea, bottled pickles, vinegar, etc., and new lines are being added every year.

And why the change?

The opinions of manufacturers who are putting up these goods are interesting.

Human Nature Demands Good Goods.

"It is nothing but human nature," said one, "that the people want to eat good, clean, sanitary, high grade foods. The only question is whether they can afford such goods. If they can, or think they can, they will buy them.

"Now, I am not saying that all goods sold in bulk are not clean, not sanitary and not of high quality. Some of them unquestionably are, but I maintain they cannot be depended upon to the same degree as goods in package.

"A manufacturer puts up his product in package. Say it is a tea. He stipulates on the package what kind of tea it is, places his name on it and realizes that in order to build up his business he must maintain the quality and flavor he began with.

"The retail dealer knows this. He has confidence in the future of such an article, because of its uniformity, and sells it. On the other hand, his own blend may vary. If he is not an expert blender and not able to purchase the same teas always, he cannot produce a uniform blend.

"The consumer knows of this uniformity and purchases package teas. Not that he is extravagant, but because he wants a particular blend."

Reputation of the Packer.

A broker who sells considerable quantities of package raisins, dates, etc., maintains that the dealer can sell these goods more readily for the reason that they are practically sure of being clean and sanitary.

"If they are not," he added, "the packers of those dried fruits whose names and trade marks are on the package, are going to suffer. The consumer, even if he has to pay more, has learned there will be no loss through spoiled or hardened fruit. They come in a neat pasteboard packet, which the housewife can handle more easily and without any loss, and I cannot see the purchase of them can be called extravagant."

The question of cost of doing business on the part of the retailer was brought up by another manufacturer.

"Every dealer knows the length of time spent in parcelling up sugar and such goods as are sold in bulk in small quantities. In the case of package raisins, mincemeat, bottled pickles, etc., a great deal of time is spared him. He can, too, make a better display on his counters and shelves and in the windows."

More Chances to be Careless.

That the housewife frequently loses considerable foodstuffs through bursting of paper bags, placing pickles, vinegar, etc., in bottles and sealers tainted with something not palatable, and which spoils the flavor, was the contention of still another.

"I would call that extravagant," he said, "and should think the careless housewife at least would save money by buying her goods in packet form. She would in such a case lose little if anything, and save money over cost of the other."

"It is all a question of quality, uniformity of flavor and cleanliness," was the ultimatum of still another.

"Would I be extravagant if I bought pure goods, goods I knew I could depend on and goods that were clean and free from dirt and vermin?" he queried.

Wants Sanitary Foods.

"Supposing I went into a store for some raisins and saw an open box covered with dust and dirt with possibly a cat or two hovering nearby, I certainly would feel loath to buy them, even if my purse were low and I could get them half as cheaply as others on the shelf done up in a package.

"The country is prosperous, as The Post says. There is a strong movement towards unadulterated pure foods. People believe them to be more healthy, and they are. While they may in some cases cost a little more, good health gives a man more power to earn more money, makes him live longer and happier and you know impure foods tend to poison the body and curtail strength and length of life.

"While there are pure goods sold in bulk, yet they cannot be depended upon like those in packet form where the word "PURE" is inscribed in large letters over a manufacturer's name.

"I maintain it is an economic waste to have unhealthy men in the country. Unadulterated, sanitary foods tend to make healthy men and cannot be considered extravagant. If package goods are more sanitary—and I believe they are on the whole—then the country is the better off.

"As stated by The Financial Post, production in Canada has not been going ahead in proportion to the growth in population. The result is there are more demands for particular goods and prices have been forced up. Take eggs, for instance. During the past few years we have scarcely exported any eggs, whereas a decade ago we had any amount to send away.

"In fact, I see in recent issues of The Grocer we have had to import ourselves from the United States. Same applies to butter and in part to cheese. We are growing fast, and unless production increases rapidly we may continue to expect high prices, package or no package."

Selling Seeds When the Market is High

Some Farm and Garden Seeds Reach Record Prices—Clover, Timothy, Alsike, Beet, Pea, Carrot and Mangel all Show Advances on Account of Drought—Alfalfa an Exception—Time to Stock on Part of Merchants—Good Seed Should Be Displayed and Sold.

The world-wide drought of last year has had the effect of enhancing values of many lines handled by the grocer and general merchant.

Seeds is among the commodities that have been adversely affected in this particular. Prices on both garden and field seeds are generally higher this year and some lines "sky high," showing extraordinary advances over last and previous years.

Clover and Timothy High.

Clovers and timothy, of which grocers and general merchants sell a goodly quantity, show substantially increased values. Garden seeds are invariably higher. On some lines of beets and carrots, for instance, advances of close on 150 per cent. are recorded, while mangels and field beets have gone up as much as 100 per cent.

The extremely hot and dry weather of last summer is still fresh in the minds of readers. Bodily discomfort was not the only side to it. Growth was retarded and plants and grains checked from developing into the seed stage and for that reason the production of seeds was small.

Not alone was this true throughout Canada, but there was universally unfavorable weather throughout the world with accordingly reduced crops of seeds. Very few sections escaped a reduction in yield.

Situation in Red Clover.

For his red clover the retail dealer will have to pay from 40 to 50 per cent. more than last year. For instance, on the Toronto market a year ago No. 1 Government standard cost around $17.50 per cwt. The present price is from $24 to $25 per cwt. Timothy was high last year. But last year's price looks low compared with values this year. An increase of from $4 to $5 per cwt. over last year is quite general. The comparison with the price of a few years ago would make things look even worse.

A few years ago around $7 per cwt. was considered quite a high price for timothy on the Toronto market. Today's price is from $18 to $19. That is for the best. Alsike has also joined in the general advance, in some cases being 4 to 5 cents per pound higher. White clover is 12 to 13 cents per pound higher than a year ago.

Exception in Alfalfa.

Higher prices are the general rule. There are, however often exceptions to rules. This year it is Alfalfa or Lucerne, which although the Canadian yield was perhaps no better than the year before, showed a good increase in many European countries. This clover is not affected by drought like other kinds, because its roots grow very deep, and it can gather moisture from farther down.

The important fact is that in contrast to the general upward trend, this line is $2 to $2.50 per cwt. lower in price this year, goodly quantities being imported from Europe.

The sale of Alfalfa has been showing large increases in past few years in Canada. Indeed it has only been lately that the farmer has become acquainted with it. It is bound to be a big seller this year.

In field corn, some varieties will be about the same as last year while others will show some increases.

Garden, vegetable and root crop seeds are invariably higher. Garden beets, peas and carrots are especially so. Other lines mentioned as showing increases are sugar beets, mangels and field carrots. Scarcity is the cause. Some lines have remained pretty well at normal. Turnips are about the same as last year.

See to Stock of Seeds.

It is time that the grocer and general merchant commenced to interest himself in seeds and anticipate his wants for the coming season. Some dealers have already seen to their supply, and there seems nothing to be gained by holding off. In several instances indeed, wholesale dealers look for a continued strengthening tendency. Red clover on several markets of late has been making considerable headway in this direction.

There is another side to the question also. The wise dealer gets his goods in early and thus has plenty of time to arouse the interest of his customers. While the snow is yet thick upon the ground he has his goods on display, and has done a great deal in creating business and arousing interest in his seeds before the unprogressive dealer has perhaps ordered his supply.

Dealer Must Use His Selling Power.

Naturally with prices so high, the question of whether the amount sold will be as large as in other years, arises. The question was put to a wholesale seed man.

"It lies with the retail merchant," he replied, "whether or not the farmer will purchase as heavily as usual. Of course, there will naturally be a tendency to cut down purchases, but that is where the country merchant will be able to display his salesmanship.

"It is up to him to educate the farmer that it is to his own interests to buy and sow just as much seed as usual."

This, will the merchants this year be afforded an opportunity of using their salesmanship. They are in close touch with the people who use seeds, and their advice will go a long way in influencing them to buy.

Talking Points for the Merchant.

It is against his own interests that the farmer reduce his acreage because of high price of seed. It only takes 7 to 8 pounds to sow an acre, one wholesaler points out. Another dealer has figured it may possibly cost around 80 cents more to sow an acre this year. "What does that amount mean," he commented, "with farmers getting 20 to 25 dollars per ton for their hay."

Farm journals advise farmers to purchase only the best grade of seeds. The merchant should do the same. The reason for sowing only the best seed is quite apparent. Good seeds mean fewer complaints. They mean a greater degree of satisfaction to both dealer and customer. It makes the future selling of seeds a much easier proposition.

Sell Quality Seed.

The dealer who sells low grade seed to his customers cannot expect to retain their seed trade. In fact, it impairs his general reputation and lessens the confidence which customers put in him.

Let the merchant sell only the best seeds. Let him show his salesmanship by selling a greater quantity this year than ever before.

The Management of a Retail Business

No. 5—Cash Discounts. (Continued.)

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

The foregoing balance sheets (see last week) of course constitute mere memoranda, being based on estimated stock on hand, but they are nevertheless useful as forming a fairly accurate indication of the state of each business at the close of the first quarter of the year.

Although the period has been short, scarcely long enough for any business to find its bearings, as it were, yet both merchants have gained some useful experience in judging human nature. They have both learned the tendency of customers to enlarge rather than diminish the amounts they owe, and that a large proportion of their present accounts receivable was incurred during the first month. No. 1 merchant is especially dissatisfied because he had planned, at the outset, to adhere almost entirely to a cash business. It is very hard, however, to live almost entirely up to any rule, and in this case it is like a horse that is almost always ready to run away. There is no comfort and some danger in driving a horse of that kind.

$10 Coupon Books.

He realizes, too, that a rigid enforcement of the cash rule would most probably reduce the volume of his trade, to the advantage of No. 2, his competitor. After due consideration, a new plan suggested itself, which, in effect, would encourage cash trading and at the same time widen the distribution of his credits and limit the amount to each customer.

Being an industrial district, his patrons mostly received their wages weekly, and he wisely concluded that accounts could be paid weekly and determined upon $10 as the limit of an individual credit. To avoid the inconveniences of book-keeping, he arranged to have coupons printed, in book form, in varying denominations from five cents to $1.00. Each book contained a promissory note for $10 in his favor, which the customer was required to sign on receiving the coupons.

Allowed Cash Discount.

The inducement for cash was 2½ per cent. discount, or $9.75 per book. Coupons representing the amount of each purchase were to be collected on delivery of the goods, and when exhausted a further issue would not be made while payment of the previous book was outstanding. Furthermore, the notes provided for interest from date of maturity, getting over a difficulty which is not met by merely printing on a statement that interest will be charged on overdue accounts. This is a common practice, but has no force in law, because it is not a contract. These coupons bore the book number, for identification, and by cancelling coupons in what was called the outstanding coupon book, prepared for the purpose, the liability on this account could be ascertained with very little trouble at any time.

Such was the plan inaugurated by No. 1 on the first day of the second quarter's business, April 1st.

Merchant, No. 2, in the meantime, had been in a deep study over the condition of his accounts. He had ample receivables to offset his payables, but collections were becoming increasingly difficult and no remedial plan had occurred to him beyond a little extra effort in collecting.

Opportunity to Replenish Stock.

Another thought occurred to No. 1 He had an established line of credit at his bank for $1,000 and it was folly to let this remain idle. He discounted $750 for 30 days, and proceeded to replenish his stock, which had been depleted to some extent. But he did not buy in the same small quantities. Special prices were securable for 5 or more case orders in some lines and these advantages he seized as far as possible, realizing the force of the trite old saying "well bought is half sold." Let us see how they stood at the end of the fourth month.

End of Fourth Month.

Merchant No. 2 sold during the month $2,500, an increase of $500 over the previous month, due to some of No. 1's customers going over to him because of his new plan, which they did not like. Only one-third of the total was sold for cash, however, but he had collected $1,000 last month's accounts, leaving $967 still to be gathered in. Of course his accounts payable, $918 had been paid in the meantime, and also some of the current month, but he was compelled to purchase rather heavily, in order to keep his stock up to standard, these amounting to $2,200,. and representing an increased number of creditors. Here is the record (expenses being the same as before), which compare with last month, in previous article.

Cash in hand	$ 183 00
Accounts receivable	2,633 64
Owing to creditors	1,617 67

Merchant No. 1 had also worked on his outstanding accounts of last month, reducing the amounts from $766 to $135. Out of eighty customers he had lost ten on account of the coupon system he had inaugurated. Several new ones had also come to him, attracted by the system, so that, all in all, he had lost but little ground. He had discouraged his good customers from paying cash across the counter, realizing that the coupons were an effective means of holding trade, and consequently his cash sales, exclusive of coupons, were only $150. He had sold 240 books of coupons to eighty customers, or an average of three to each, 60 of them at $9.75 for cash, his loss on this score being $15. All but 60 had been paid for as they fell due, so that his bills receivable stood at $600. He had redeemed $1,850 coupons in sales and therefore his liability to customers was $550, or just $50 less than his bills receivable. His stock had been increased in the meantime, his purchases amounting to $3,500, on half of which he had secured a five per cent. advantage in quantity price, besides two per cent. cash discount. He stood thus:

Cash in hand	$154 83
Accounts receivable	135 00
Bills receivable	600 00
Owing to Bank	750 00
Unredeemed coupons	550 00

His bank discount cost $4.37 and loss on coupons $15, but his gain on quantity price was $87.50 and cash discounts $68.25, a total of $155.75, or $136.38 net.

What Balance Sheets Show.

Space will not permit our going into the next two months at this writing, so we will do as before, construct new balance sheets, basing the profits at 25 per cent. of the sales as before.

Merchandise Account—

	No. 1.	No. 2.
Stock on hand April 1st	$2,125 00	$2,125 00
Stock purchased during month	3,500 00	2,200 00
	$5,625 00	$4,325 00
Sales for month at 75% cost	1,500 00	1,875 00
Stock on hand	$4,125 00	$2,450 00

No. 1 has now a much larger stock, it will be seen owing to quantity buying, but in consequence it will not be necessary for him to go to market quite so often. His balance sheet now stands

SITUATION IN SUGAR.

Contrary to general expectations and natural causes, sugar declined 10 cents again, making the fifth during the past two months. On a Montreal basis it is now $5.35 in comparison to $4.50 a year ago.

The cause of the last decline is attributed to some price cutting going on among United States firms, the contagion spreading to Canada.

Just at present, the sugar situation is quite interesting in view of the Brussels Convention which opened on Monday and which is to decide whether Russia shall be allowed to increase her exports. While there are conflicting reports regarding this matter it is generally conceded that the demands of English refiners will be met in part and that we may see an increase in Russia's sugar beet exports.

If this materializes, it will tend to an easier feeling. English and French refiners, however, have been engaged in buying up unsold Javas and beets indicating that when present holdings are disposed of there will be some scarcity.

Europe is counting on Cuban supplies, but there is a possibility that United States Congress may lower the duties on Cuban sugar, which, if consummated, might eliminate the chances of Europe being a purchasing factor in Cuba. These conditions make the market quite interesting.

A decrease of 1,005,796 tons is shown in comparing present European and American stocks with those of a year ago

COUPON BOOKS TO LIMIT CREDIT.

In his article on Business Management in this week's issue, H. C. Carson, F.S.S., makes a suggestion that deserves careful study.

It is in respect to a method for reducing book debts, and will tend, if properly operated, to the prevention of losses through bad debts.

He suggests that the merchant have printed coupon books to the amount of, say $10, and that when these have been exhausted by any customer, no further issue would be made until the amount was paid. Each coupon book would also contain a printed promissory note in the merchant's favor, signed by the customer, and providing for the addition of interest if not paid at date of maturity.

The plan is fully described in Mr. Carson's article. As intimated above, it is worth most careful attention, and particularly so since so many dealers are having difficulty over slow pays and bad debts.

ROLLED OATS ADVANCE.

An advance of 10 cents per bag in rolled oats is announced this week. This upward turn probably denotes the end of the price-cutting campaign that has been waged at many centres.

It will be remembered that rolled oat prices during December were reduced 30 cents per bag in the face of a fairly steady market for the raw material. Keen competition was apparently responsible.

It was felt that the condition of the oat market did not warrant the prices which ruled throughout January, and that price-cutting would shortly disappear and a reaction set in. This has been the case.

The oat market rules steady and higher. Goodly quantities are being worked off for export. The market across the border is very high. There is a brisk demand for rolled oats and the market is regarded as steady and firm.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

There is little new in the wheat situation of the West this week. The severe cold spell which had been holding steady for over four weeks was broken during the week and a few mild days enjoyed.

Towards the latter part of the week, however, the thermometer again fell and once more icey winds swept the country. So far, the season has been mild as far as storms are concerned, but the severe cold has necessitated the complete stopping of all threshing operations, and seriously hindering loading operations.

The decision of the Inter-State Commission to allow reduced freight rates for grain to be stored in bond to United States grain centres is regarded as a help, but really does not relieve the situation. At the present there are hundreds of thousands, if not millions of bushels of grain waiting to be marketed but shortage of cars and space in interior and terminal elevators make it impossible to sell the same.

The result is that creditors are pressing farmers for payment of notes and farmers in their turn are unable to secure any ready money. In fact, a case is quoted where a farmer with 10,000 bushels of wheat ready for sale on his farm was unable to buy a meal in town. With such conditions existing, the reduction of freight for grain to be stored "in bond" is of little relief.

The final outcome so far has been the resolution of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association at thier annual convention last week asking the railroads to apply to the Interstate Commission to grant reduced rates on grain for sale in United States markets, and not only for grain "to be stored in bond." If this is done the situation will be relieved; but if not, then there will likely be some hardships experienced.

FOOD VALUE OF CEREAL FOODS.

The benefits of cereal foods was the subject of an address by J. Austin before the Coventry Grocers' Association, England, recently. A wide range of samples of cereals was shown to illustrate the points brought forward in the lecture. The speaker emphasized the im-portarcc of protein as the essential constitutent of food and went into the details of the percentages in which it was found in the various cereals. In this regard he referred particularly to oatmeal and rice.

He stated that the Japanese in their recent war had been able to sustain themselves with vigor upon a mere handful of rise, and he strongly urged grocers to become specialists in some of these cereals, notably with regard to rice. The speaker considered that the grocers had been too long indifferent to pushing these commodities. He suggested that the food value of rice might be made a strong point of by grocers, and the benefit of technical instruction lay in becoming acquainted with these values.

They should impress upon the people the benefits of purchasing the things that sustained life.

In connection with this subject there is the reminder of the particular value of peas, beans, oatmeal and kindred foods at this season of the year. During the winter special efforts should be made to sell them to customers. The grocer knows these things, but too often he fails to put his knowledge to use in his selling work.

THE TIPPING EVIL AGAIN.

The tipping evil and the great need there is of suppressing it is again brought to the fore by some rather startling figures presented by an American contemporary. Last year the Pullman company carried 623,182,757 passengers. There are no statistics to show how many of them paid their tips like little men and how many had the courage to resolutely walk off the car without contributing to the quarter hoard of the obsequious but lynx-eyed porter. The stony stare of a supercilious official "makes cowards of us all." Most men would rather pay a quarter than suffer the occularly expressed contempt of the dusky czar of a pullman. It is, perhaps, safe to assume that not more than one in four, who ride in pullmans, escape paying tribute. That would make the amount paid out in tips last year $116,844,266.

The figure is astounding but probably not very far from the real facts. There is a ludicrous side to it after all. The men of America pay over one hundred million dollars annually rather than break what has become more or less of a custom! Where does all that money go to? We doubt if the recipients of it could tell. If Pullman porters were a thrifty tribe each individual one of them would be riding in a motor car of his own.

This is one source of "economic waste" which could be effectually remedied. When will traveling men find and enforce that remedy?

AVOIDING MISTAKES IN ORDERS.

Retailers are often annoyed by mistakes in goods received for which they have sent a written order to the wholesale house. Frequently they receive brands of goods different from what they have been selling and recommending to their customers. At other times they receive different sized packages or tins from those named, and sometimes the quality is not the same as they have been selling.

In some instances the wholesale houses are to blame for these mistakes, but if the retailer would give more care to the sending in of orders, a large majority of these mistakes would be avoided. It is always best to give full directions. The wholesale man is not always a mindreader. If you neglect to specify the brand or the size of the package, or any other of the important directions, you may not get just the articles that you wish. Sending goods to a customer who orders from you by mail is quite different. If you know your customer it is not as necessary that she specify the brand. You can select those goods you are in a position to recommend, and nine times out of ten you give satisfaction.

But in sending to the wholesale house it is different. Take an extra minute and look over the order a second time, to see if you have made plain just what you want. Give a little attention also to your writing. In this way you will prevent many mistakes.

LOOK TO ASSORTMENT.

A certain merchant in an Ontario village found that many orders were finding their way to catalogue houses. He believed his prices were just as low as those of the mail order house. In fact he never heard a complaint that the latter were selling cheaper than he.

He decided to enquire just why this trade was going away. He approached a woman whom he know to be purchasing elsewhere and asked her to tell him frankly why she sent out for goods, stating that if it were in any way his fault, he would attempt to remedy it.

"It is because you don't have all the goods I want, and I think that is the reason the others do, too," she unhesitatingly stated.

"But you send away for goods which I keep," he returned. "Why do you do that?"

"Well, we have to send for some lines, so we order enough to get the freight paid."

The problem had been solved for that merchant. He began to look to his assortment of goods and to the handling of several of the new specialties in order to stop the flood of mail order trade. And he has succeeded to a marked extent in curbing this habit.

While the merchant should attempt to keep his stock as small as possible, he should not do so to the detriment of their just dues.

It will cost a wholesale fruit merchant about $700 a year at the rate proposed. "Four calls per day per phone for a business house is almost worse than none at all," they claim.

LIKE OUR SIZE.

At their annual convention in New York last week, the Grocery and Allied Press Association voted in favor of standardizing their papers and adopting a type page 7 inches wide by 10 inches deep. This is practically the size adopted by The Canadian Grocer over 25 years ago, and used by all the MacLean trade newspapers as follows, a very creditable record for four months' trading:

THE MANAGEMENT OF A RETAIL BUSINESS.

Assets—
Cash in hand		$ 154 83
Accounts receivable	$135 00
Bills receivable	600 00
	$735 00
Less unredeemed coupons	550 00
		185 00
Merchandise		4,125 00
Fixtures, etc.		1,000 00
		$5,464 83
Liabilities—
To Bank		750 00
Net worth		$4,714 83
Original capital		3,500 00
Gain (4 months)		$1,214 83

No. 2 merchant shows the following balance sheet, undoubtedly solvent, but with an enlarged list of creditors and more than ever dependent upon his customers to protect his credit.

Assets—
Cash in hand	$ 183 00
Accounts receivable	2,633 64
Merchandise	2,450 00
Fixtures	1,000 00
	$6,266 64
Liabilities—
To sundry creditors	1,617 67
Net worth	$4,648 97
Original capital	3,500 00
Net gain (4 months)	$1,148 97

The net gain of No. 1 is only $65.86 greater than his competitor, but No. 2 has done more business, his sales from the beginning amounting to $7,000, against $6,500 by No. 1. The net gain of No. 1 in ratio to sales is therefore 18.6 per cent., compared to 16.4 per cent. by No. 2. Both rates are high, however, and it has just occurred to the writer that the withdrawals of the merchants for living expenses, etc., have not been taken into consideration. This must be adjusted in the next instalment.

Instead of designating the merchants as No. 1 and No. 2 in future it would be appropriate and justifiable to refer to No. 1 as the merchant and to the other as the shopkeeper, for they are growing further apart each month in all the essential features of progressive commerce.

Sugar Down Under Price War in U.S.

Canadian Refined Goes Down 10 Cents Per Cwt. on Thursday of Last Week in Sympathy With the Lower Prices in U. S. Caused by Price Cutting—General Conditions of Market Indicated No Change—Marmalades Higher Because of Dear Sugar—Walnuts Slightly Higher in Montreal—Molasses Easier in Nova Scotia—Syrup Strong in Manitoba.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Walnuts.—½c increase.

Sugar.—Steady at decline.

Coffee.—New crops coming.

MONTREAL, Feb. 1.—Trade has been more brisk than it was this time last year and wholesalers have found that the retailer in spite of stock-taking activities has been on the look out for inventory bargains besides buying pretty freely.

A good trade is passing in syrups, wholesalers finding that dealers who only handled a small quantity this time last year are now asking for a number of cases regularly. This may probably be accounted for by the soaring tendencies of butter and the Lenten season's approach.

February should prove a good month in every respect and some developments in the different markets will take place.

SUGAR.—Sugar, contrary to expectations, decreased ten cents last week. The decline came somewhat as a surprise as everything pointed to a rise if anything. The demand is pretty good and market should receive all possible attention. The New York market is quiet and steady. This situation is considered natural after the excitement earlier last week though some thought the lull was only temporary.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—With Lenten trade not far off the demand for syrup has increased and retailers will find that sales will be pretty strong. No changes in price are imminent.

The demand for molasses is also satisfactory and prices remain the same.

DRIED FRUITS.—No change, within the last week, has taken place. The demand for dried fruit is fairly good, but on a much modified scale, owing to the late increase in prices. Stock on hand is small and judging from scarcity, it is quite evident, the prices will go up.

Evaporated apples are still high, and are likely to advance, as the result of small stocks.

COFFEE.—"What will be the price of coffee within the next few weeks?" This is a question, which can only be answered, by awaiting full reports of crops. If the crops have been good, then, an easing off in price will be quite evident. But on other hand, if the deliveries are going to be small, an increase will be certain. The situation of this market at present is interesting and needs attention.

TEAS.—The tea market is strong at present. Prices have not changed and it is a question if any decline or advancement will be heard of for some time.

Japan is entirely cleaned out of teas of every description. Everything has been delivered and the agents sent out to take orders for next year's crop claim the prices will be the same next season.

China has showed a shortage this season, but the warfare is in no way responsible. It is possible, however, that exportation might be held up later on but this cannot be certified. Cheap China Congos have been scarce this year and no more can be had.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—In the balance.

Evaps.—Firmer.

Beans.—Holding firmly.

Marmalade.—New make higher.

TORONTO, Feb. 1.—The first month in the year has been left behind and in point of sales is regarded by most jobbers as being a satisfactory starter on what is confidently looked for to as prosperous year. Weather conditions during month have not been the most favorable; but in spite of this, wholesalers view it as being fully up to the January standard. Collections are also reported as fairly good.

Sugar declined 10 cents towards end of last week, probably due to lower prices in the U.S. induced by price-cutting war on part of refiners. Market is now regarded as in the balance, awaiting the outcome of the Brussels Convention now in conference.

SUGAR.—Immediately after we went to press last week, sugar prices declined 10 cents per cwt., bringing local prices down to $5.45. This decline was not generally looked for, and came somewhat as a surprise. In the United States during last week refiners went on what appears to be price-cutting war. One company to induce business dropped prices 5 cents per cwt. early in week. Another went 5 cents better, only to be followed by an additional reduction by the first. In sympathy with the lower prices across the line, Canadian prices declined 10 cents, although general market in raws considered ruled steady.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.—A good volume of trade under seasonable weather is being done in syrup and molasses. From now on to the end of Lent will be a good selling season and dealers should look to their stocks. Molasses is easier in Nova Scotia but there has been no weakening here.

TEA.—There are no special features to report in tea. Situation as reflected both here and in primary markets is one of steadiness, with nothing apparent in outlook to shape the market otherwise.

COFFEE.—Locally, coffee shows no particular change. On the whole buyers have been taking coffee with a marked degree of caution. This is not an unusual thing, however, since high prices set in. The amount of valorization coffee to be sold this year is soon to be announced and is being awaited by coffee world. News coming forward now would by no means indicate any weakening.

NUTS.—For the season, the trade in nuts might be regarded as fair. Retailers bought heavily previous to Christmas and they prefer to clean up any leftovers before doing further purchasing. With the many indoor gatherings now being held, demand from retailers for nuts should be appreciable. General market in nuts is inclined to strength. In primary, almonds are scarce and firm. Shelled walnuts also show signs of strength.

SEED.—The universal drought of last year has worked for general higher prices in seeds. Some lines are especially high. Red clover, alsike and timothy all show substantial gains over last year. Alfalfa is a little cheaper and promises to be big seller this year. Field corn is in several lines a little higher.

Timothy on account of the extremely high price has been quiet. Red clover has been strengthening and is firm with an upward tendency. More interest is shortly expected to be shown by the retail trade.

CANNED GOODS.

MONTREAL.—There is a steady demand for canned goods in spite of remarks to the contrary made recently by certain jobbers. A few grocers who did not stock up heavily are now purchasing, but vegetables are moving out nicely. Red raspberries are practically exhausted, the few cases remaining fetching quite a high price.

TORONTO.—Higher prices will be required for marmalades this year. It was pointed out in December that this would probably be case and late prices received bears this out. Most of the makers in Great Britain are asking 10 cents per dozen more while a similar advance has been made by some Canadian manufacturers. Marmalade is now being made. High price of sugar is reason for the advanced prices.

Demand for canned goods is fair. Many retailers are pretty well stocked as yet, and find it necessary to fill up only on odd lines. Because of high price of vegetables, the retailer who pushes them should find good sale for the canned article.

Chicken soup, on which the delivery was so small, is pretty well cleaned up. Other lines of soups are reported as moving well.

With the approach of Lent, salmon will be coming in for greater attention.

POINTERS—

Sugar.—Declined 10c.

Syrup.—Strong.

Dried Fruits.—Steady.

WINNIPEG, Feb. 1.—A few mild days during past week was regarded as a boon to enable the trade to right itself. The mild spell, however, was not long enough to enable the congestion of cars to be relieved to any extent and as a result there is little change from last week in this respect. It is to be hoped that the strenuous effort being put forth by the railroads will enable the congestion to be relieved before many weeks are out. It is essential that such should be the case before spring shipments start with a rush.

SUGAR.—A decline of ten cents per cwt. took place during week, and, in fact, many look for lower prices to come.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Feb. 1.—Business was not quite so brisk in the wholesale grocery trade this week. The recent intensely cold weather had depressing effect on business. Shipments of goods were light and there was practically no large movement of perishable goods to outside points.

Potatoes continue in extra good demand. Dealers who have stocks on hand are not anxious to dispose of them, as they feel that if potatoes winter well prices will soar in spring. An addition to the good demand locally is an excellent inquiry from abroad. Nova Scotia stock is now quoted at $2.50 per bag and Island at $2.

Few first class apples are offering. Spies are scarce. Nearly all best stock is being exported, and local market is almost bare of good hard No. 1 winter fruits.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Feb. 1.—With markets and business rather quiet, past week has been dull for grocery trade in and about this city. Not for some time has there been such a spirit of deadness prevailing in local business, but it is expected to pick up before long.

Practically the only feature of interest is the steady upward trend of potatoes. At present the local price ranges from $2.25 to $2.40, and there is every reason to believe that it will go much higher before many weeks. There have been large shipments of potatoes to Upper Canada, and some to the West Indies and Cuba, and this is responsible to certain extent for fact that the stock on hand now is none too plentiful, as compared with demand in the outlook. Local dealers and shippers are interested greatly in the word which has been received from the States that the duty on potatoes may be removed, for should this be done, one prominent merchant said this week, he would not be surprised if potatoes advanced to $3 per barrel.

Orange Trade Rather Disappointing

This is Due to Poor Eating Fruit That Has Been Coming Forward—Improvement is Looked Forward to — California Oranges Not Showing up so Well in Size—Celery Scarce and High—Shipments Expected to Increase During the Month—Potato Stiuation Still Strong.

The orange trade at some centres at least has been rather disappointing of late. Oranges have not been selling as readily as has been the case in other years at this time. The reason assigned by many dealers is the large ratio of sour and poor eating oranges that have come to market, the result of being shipped before fully matured. While late arrivals in some cases may show slight improvement, the poor fruit sold earlier has without doubt turned the public against oranges to some extent.. Navels, it is said, will shortly show improvement, while sweet Floridas are now arriving on some markets.

A report from California notes that size of the oranges will be smaller than at first expected. Under normal conditions size would have been all to be desired, but conditions have not been normal. Cold dry weather has kept the fruit from developing and the oranges will not be up to the average in size, it is said.

The strong potato situation in Canada still continues. Imports of English and Irish potatoes are being made. Values in New Brunswick have shown some further tightening and holders there are confident in their views. As pointed out last week, in case the United States lift the duty on potatoes temporarily, it will lend even greater strength to market.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—"Well, it's a regular battle at present with the frost," said one of Montreal's biggest wholesalers, "and prices will depend to a very great extent on the weather clerk."

Lemons.—Receipts are large with good demand.

Oranges.—Receipts also big but market quiet.

Apples.—Have been dragging considerably. Sales small and stocks light, but dealers are inclined to be quite optimistic about the situation.

Tomatoes are coming up from Cuba and selling well, but future quotations will best be judged by the dealer if he can forecast the trend of the barometer down South.

VEGETABLES.—Prices are pretty high just now owing to climatic conditions in different centres. Californian produce is weak owing to dry and cold weather prevailing there. Yet no complaints can be made about the demand which is brisk in spite of quotations. If the cold weather down South continues prices will surely go up.

The potato situation is interesting at present and commands a good deal of attention. The prices are extremely high and an advancement is pretty certain.

Importation of Irish potatoes is helping, in a small degree, to relieve the situation. This assistance, however, is hardly noticeable owing to fact that the States are endeavoring to secure all the potatoes coming this way. The season has been extremely bad and farmers have suffered great losses. This market is increasing rapidly and should be followed with utmost care.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS. — A drop of 10 cents per box in strawberries at some times would be an appreciable reduction indeed. It is not so much so at this season but is nevertheless welcome to those who indulge in this luxury. Florida stock is selling at 65 cents.

A shipment of Florida oranges which arrived early in the week has been well taken up. Some California stock has been quite sour and has not been pleasing the consumers. Some dealers report that the orange trade is suffering considerably in consequence. Navel oranges are shortly expected to show up better. There has been a fair movement in marmalade oranges.

Grapefruit and Almeria grapes are finding a fair demand. Apples are little on the quiet side.

VEGETABLES—California celery continues to hold its high level, $7 per case being asked locally. In spite of high figure, volume going out to the retail trade is fairly large. Florida stock has not as yet started coming to this market. Stocks of Canadian celery are quite limited.

Potatoes have lost none of their strength, some dealers' ideas being slightly above present quotations. There are those who predict that the $2 mark will be reached before many weeks have passed. Holders in New Brunswick are holding firmly.

Should Study the Food Quality of Fruits

Knowledge of Them Will Assist the Dealer in Making Sales —Some Hints on Display—Suggestions on Selling Oranges, Strawberries, Grapefruit, Apples, Lemons, etc.

The grocer knows, or should know that fruits possess valuable food qualities.

"Do you know what you're eating?" asked the doctor of the girl.

"An apple, of course," replied the girl..

"You are eating," said the doctor, "albumen, sugar, gum, malic acid, gallic acid, fiber, water and phosporus."

"I hope those things are good. They sound alarming."

"Nothing could be better. You ate, I observed, rather too much meat at dinner. The malic acid in the apple neutralizes the excess of chalky matter caused by too much meat, and thereby helps you to keep young. They are good for your complexion. Their acids drive out the noxious matter which causes skin eruptions. They are good for your brain. which those same noxious matters, if retained, render sluggish. Moreover, the acids of the apple diminish the acidity of the stomach that comes with some forms of indigestion. The phosphorus, of which it contains a large percentage, renews the essential nervous matter of the brain aid spinal column."

Strong Talking Points.

Thus are apples described in scientific fashion as a healthful food. The same good qualities are possessed by all fruits to a greater or less extent. Thus is the grocer given a strong talking point in the sale of fruits. It should be fully taken advantage of in creating demand.

Push Fruit for Marmalade.

Marmalade oranges are now on the market. The season is not a long one, and drops off sharply, so that it behooves this dealer to get his customers interested in this line at once. The line should be talked up by merchant and clerks while a good sized display will aid materially.

It is suggested that the advertising of these oranges contain a recipe for orange marmalade, or it may be advertised in newspaper space and window display that recipes may be had at the store.

Advances in Grapefruit.

The grapefruit portion of the business should not be neglected. The sale of this line in Canada is steadily increasing. Those dealers who do not find a natural demand for this line, should attempt to create it. Grapefruit is not well known to consumers in some sections and some time must be given to introduce it. Once it is on the consumers' table, however, it recommends itself.

Imported Strawberries Arriving.

The luscious and appetising strawberry is now adorning our Canadian markets. It comes from Florida, and although at quite a fancy price as yet, will moderate in value as the season advances. Simply displayed strawberries cause the customer's mouth to water and there is a certain class to whom they will strongly appeal. Handling this line early stamps a grocer as one of the aggressive dealers who get the "first of the season."

This. the season of colds, make it plain why lemons should receive due prominence. Apples for the reasons outlined in our opening paragraphs should be kept before customers. Bananas are of a fair quality now. Care should be taken in the handling of them. Be sure they are not touched by frost, which is harmful both to flavor and appearance.

The Use of Fancy Baskets.

Display as emphasized before is of great value in making sales. In this regard fancy baskets will assist materially to make them attractive. For showing apples, oranges, grapefruit, etc., display stands can now be secured at a nominal figure that allow cases to be placed one upon another. Besides showing the goods properly. these stands take up a minumum amount of floor space, an important feature with the majority of dealers.

Well Arranged Fruit and Vegetable Window Which Presents Many Good Suggestions.

Rolled Oats Advance 10 cents per Bag

In Sympathy With the Stronger Oat Market—Canadian Oats go to United States—This is Unusual Occurrence—Cornmeal Higher at Several Points—Winter Wheat Flour Firmer—Advance Announced in Maritime Provinces—Manitoba Flour Rules Steady.

An advance of 10 cents per bag or 20 cents per barrel is announced in rolled oats this week. This is in keeping with our statements that price cutting being indulged in for a time at many centres was not warranted by state of the raw market and that rolled oats were likely to rule firm. Price cutting on this line seems to have disappeared and the above advance is now fairly general.

A firmer feeling has developed all round in oats. The visible supply of oats last week decreased 115,000 bushels in Canada and this has lent strength. There has been a big enquiry for Canadian oats for export. United States has recently imported some Canadian oats, showing that price of Canadian oats, including the import duty is on a parity with the United States product. The oat crop across the line has been short, and thus the difference in values.

Manitoba flours are ruling steady but millers do not regard them as showing any particular firm features. The wheat market in Winnipeg rules at about the same level as three months ago. On Oct. 26 last, May wheat on the Winnipeg market was at $1.00⅜. To-day it is $1.01⅛ for May wheat. Winter wheat has, however, been on the ascent due to small offerings of this variety. Winter wheat flours are firm and an advance of 20 cents per barrel is announced by some millers in Maritime Provinces.

The corn market during January stiffened considerably, so that corn meal has been advanced at several points in Canada.

Cereals are moving briskly. Rolled oats have been in good demand. Enquiry for flour, both domestic and export, is regarded by millers as quite satisfactory for the season.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—The flour market continues to be active with a steady demand. The prices remain the same for the present. That an increase is likely owing to large calls which will soon be made on the market, is the opinion of some.

TORONTO.

FLOUR.—Considering the season, millers state movement of flour is quite satisfactory. Domestic demand has been of fair volume, while export enquiry has also been quite good of late.

The situation in Ontario flour is one of firmness. This is the result of the higher values for Ontario wheat, which in the course of 10 days increased 6 cents per bushel. Scarcity of this commodity is the cause, offerings being practically nil. Some local dealers report that they have advanced Ontario flour 20 cents per barrel in the Maritime Provinces, but no change is as yet announced here.

Manitoba flours are steady. No. 1 Northern at bay ports is quoted at the season's record of $1.12, but some millers state it is cheaper to bring wheat direct from Winnipeg, all rail when time allows. However, the securing of supplies within a limited time is no easy matter on account of transportation congestion.

CEREALS.—In our last issue, we noted the rolled oats market as firm under a strong tendency in the raw material. The hint was worth heeding. This week, the announcement of an advance of 10 cents per bag in this line is made. There is a good retail demand in evidence, the tone of the market is healthy and strength still apparent.

Some firms note a higher figure for corn meal as mentioned last week. The corn market across the line has stiffened materially during January.

Good Time to Push Fish and Oysters

Favorable Conditions Now Exist—Weather all to be Desired so far as Retailer is Concerned—Trade Has Been Rather Brisk — Storms on East Coast That Interfered With Catch Have Somewhat Abated, But Caused Much Damage—Stronger Tone to Oysters, But no Change in Price to Retail Trade.

This is a good time to push the sale of fish and oysters. Those retailers who are putting real effort behind this department are reaping splendid results. Everything is favorable to good sales being made. Fish are comparatively cheap and are a popular food. Added to this, fresh meats and eggs are high in price. These favorable conditions work for brisk sales and with Lent but three weeks distant, prospects are indeed bright.

The storms along the eastern coast have recently abated and there has been some improvement in catch. Nova Scotia reports better catches lately of cod and haddock. Lobsters have reached a record price, while halibut is very scarce.

Climatic conditions at the sources of production have interfered somewhat with oyster gathering operations and has had the tendency to lend strength to market. This has not been marked enough, however, to affect prices to retail trade. Retail demand for oysters has been fairly good, although the severe weather at times has not been altogether favorable. Dealers should not neglect to give to oysters the attention they deserve. Properly handled they are a profitable line.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—Now that the cold season and frosts have let up, the prospects have begun to look brighter. Oysters are the only line holding back. Eight carloads of fish have just arrived after being delayed for some time by the great snow storms. There has been no downfall for some weeks so everything is open again.

Salt cod is not plentiful and will add greatly to sale of frozen fish. The Lenten season is close at hand and a great rush is expected; but the supply is hardly sufficient to fill the demand as it stands at present.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—The unusually large catches of herring being made along coast and particularly near Grand Manan and around Deer Island are really remarkable, and J. F. Calder, Dominion inspector of fisheries for St. John and Charlotte counties, said this week the like of it has never been known before. Fishermen are reaping great harvest and they are also much encouraged by the catches of cod and sardine herring, which are very plentiful as well. Judging by large catches of sardines being made, it is expected that the factories will boom in the spring.

The outlook for the coming season is bright. Smelt on local market during past week have become scarce. The local chief source of supply, the Kennebecasis river, has not yielded a favorable comparison with other years, and consequently all that are being got are saved for local orders, so that no shipments are reported.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—A good large volume of fish is going out to the retail trade. Frozen lines are moving briskly, while smoked, pickled and prepared varieties are coming in for their full share of attention. "A heavier trade than we ever had before at this season," was the emphatic manner in which one wholesale dealer expressed himself.

Conditions are indeed favorable for sale of fish. With exception of a temporary mild spell at beginning of the week, the weather has been all that could be desired.

Pickled trout in half barrels range from $7.25 to $7.75. Shrimps in 1-gal. cans are $1.25, in 2 gal. cans $2.40 and $4.60 in 4-gal. cans.

Present Standing of the Fish Market

Severe Storms and Cold Weather Responsible for Shortages in Fresh Fish—Large Firms Unable to Secure Usual Supplies—Many Fishermen Will Lose Their Traps.

By O. S. Johnson.

Advices from the Maritime Provinces clearly explain the shortage of fresh fish at the present time The storms and severe cold weather of the past few weeks have seriously interfered with the shore fisheries and no little damage has been done. The lobster, fresh and smoked fish trades are suffering in particular.

Lobsters Have a Rest.

As is well known the lobster traps are practically always set in shallow water and the fishermen who placed their gear as usual in the water, little thought that King Frost would ever deprive them, not only of the catch, no matter how small, but also of their traps.

Yet it is perfectly certain that the ice on breaking up will carry away quite an amount of the apparatus and while this can be easily replaced by some, there are others who can ill afford to lose anything of this nature as the least decrease in their cash returns must necessarily make things hard enough.

Not only has the fisherman suffered, but the shippers of live lobsters and lobster canners are also amongst those whose calculations have been upset by adverse climatic conditions and prices have advanced in consequence.

Prices of Fresh Fish.

Prices of fresh fish are beginning to firm up just now owing to the scarcity. In order to prove conclusively the shortage in this line, and to prepare retailers for higher prices which must inevitably come unless a debacle takes place, it might be mentioned that one Halifax firm handled 750,000 pounds of fresh fish about the middle of January last year, but this year they have only been able to get two or three thousand pounds.

Serious for Future Market.

This is all the more serious for future market conditions as this month things will be at a standstill because the shoal of fish which had been on the coast during November and December last has left and there are not many of the finny tribe available till March.

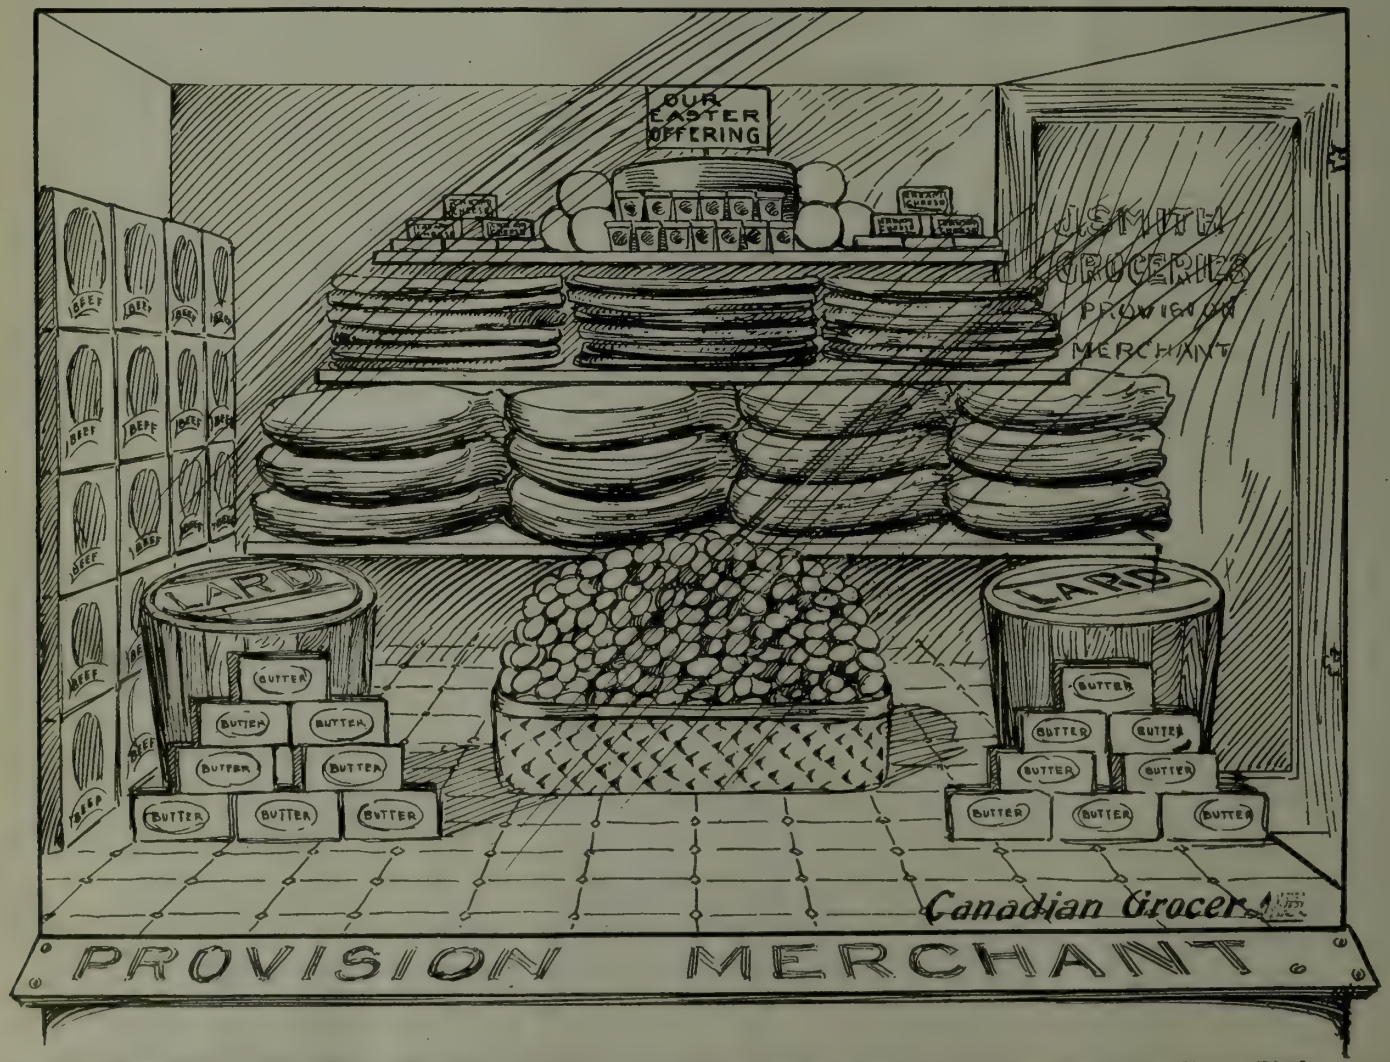
Prices of fresh cod and haddock have advanced from 25 to 30 per cent. and finnan haddies half cent per pound.

Oyster Beds Frozen Up.

Needless to say the oyster beds have also been affected and as these generally lie in sheltered bays the fishermen cannot reach them owing to the ice.

It certainly is unfortunate that such conditions should prevail just at a time when wholesalers and retailers are beginning to make plans for a big Lenten business.

However, retailers should bear all these facts in mind and not be disappointed or annoyed with their wholesaler if they find that supplies are slow in coming along.



A Provision Window That Should Bring New Business if Attractively Arranged. Should be Kept on File for an Easter Display.

Storage Eggs Reach Record Level

Stocks Well to an End—Big Imports Have Been Made From United States—Values Across the Line Also at High Level—Increase in Yield of New Laids About Only Hope—Butter is Firmer and Higher—A Decided Contrast to Situation of a Year Ago—Cheese is Still Strong—The Effect of Drouth Shown in High Price of Butter and Cheese.

The present situation in eggs and butter is a decided contrast to year ago. While values around Feb. 1 last were on downward trend, and prices in butter and eggs at United States points were sharply tobogganing, to-day and for some time past, figures on these commodities have been moving decidedly in the opposite direction.

For some time butter has been gradually firming at all points in Canada. We have perhaps some consolation in the fact that same thing is true across the border and values in New York and Chicago have recently reached a top-notch record, but that probably only lends strength to the situation here. Last year's drouth greatly reduced the production of butter, and early in the fall, general light stocks held were referred to and fact pointed out that only continued strength could be expected. Present prices testify to accuracy of this prediction.

Storage eggs have also been establishing record for themselves of late. Attention to our remarks early in the season that but conservative supplies of eggs were held in Canada would have been worth while. It did look at one time as if new laids would come to the rescue by their increase in production but those hopes were shattered by weather man during first few weeks in January. However, considering extremely cold weather, receipts of new laids have been fair.

As it stands now, storage eggs are at record figure. Stocks are well to an end and indeed for a long time many firms have found it necessary to bring supplies from markets across border. Values there have also been ascending so that at some Canadian centres, wholesalers claim they are selling for less money than they could be replaced at. Thus situation is rapidly developing into an acute one. One redeeming feature is that from now on production of new laids which was curtailed by cold weather of January can be expected to show an increase.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—Provisions are apparently steady. Pressure on the market has been noted on various occasions in spite of high prices prevailing. It looks as if sales are being made to dealers who are anticipating an increase in near future. Attention should be given to all lines just now.

BUTTER.—There was no change in butter situation in the last week. Sales have been curtailed owing to the high prices, which exceed those of last year by 10c. EGGS.—The storages are soon to see the last of the egg supply which is almost exhausted. A week and a half should tell the tale with many firms. Then if the market depends on the new laids the price will surely go beyond the reach of the workingman. The demand is heavy in spite of the quotations, which exceed last year's by fifteen cents. The prices will not show any decreases until the cold weather ceases.

PROVISIONS.—Trade cannot be described as brisk, still being inclined to quietness. "This isn't the time of the year when we look for briskness in our line," stated one wholesale dealer.

There is really no change in live hogs, but if anything market is a little steadier than week ago. Lard continues to move quite freely. Quotations on provisions show practically no change.

BUTTER.—Strength in butter market mentioned last week has developed into a quotable change, values on most lines being enhanced another cent per pound. This brings fresh creamery prints up to 34 to 36 cents, a high price indeed, but founded on small deliveries and light stocks generally held. It is only natural under high price that some attempt be made by the consumer to economize on this line. This seems to be the case, and total consumption is consequently showing a decrease.

EGGS.—Unusual conditions exist in the market for storage eggs. Prices are higher on this variety than has been known in recent years at least. Quotations rule at 34 to 35 cents per dozen and even at that price wholesale dealers say they are selling them lower than they can replace them. Another rise of 2 cents per dozen in United States eggs last week makes it impossible to lay ordinary uncandled storage eggs down in Toronto for less than 35½ cents. Of course, dealers are carrying some supplies secured at lower price but stocks are by no means large.

New laid eggs are stronger also, ruling from 37 to 42 cents. Receipts of this kind are not large, and while they can be expected to increase as the weeks move on, they will be badly needed.

CHEESE.—Cheese is high. There is no question about that. Large cheese now quoted around the 16½ cent mark could be purchased one year ago at 12¾ to 13 cents. Since early June this commodity has kept marching upward without a break or sign of one. Strength is still apparent under extremely small stocks and high prices ruling elsewhere.

More Money From the Provision Counter

What it Means to Eliminate Loss of Ends and How One Dealer Does This—After Starting Slicing Machine on One End the Other Should Also be Cut—Sells 150 Pounds Per Week — Wants of Customers Should be Studied.

By J. Risdon.

Many grocers do not pay the attention to their provision counter that they should. In many instances we see ends of bacon and ham which could have been sold at the same price as the middle if they had been properly cared for.

In every store, it seems to me, there should be one clerk responsible for this department. He should make it his business to see that all ends and pieces are used up, and that no clerk cuts more than he has sold. Bacon and ham which lies long after being cut dries up rapidly and makes it of inferior quality.

No Loss in Bacon Ends.

There is one store I know of where the dealer practically sells no bacon in the piece, and yet he never has any worthless ends. His system is worth while reviewing.

Whan a side of bacon is cut on it is not continued to the end. This would produce an end of little use. Instead it is turned around and the other end also cut on, so that the piece not cut by the slicing machine is a cut out of the middle—a very desirable cut for anybody looking for a piece for boiling. If it is not sold the same day it can be sliced the following morning and sold. The dealer in question arranges to have ten to fifteen pounds cut in advance, so that there will be no delay when the rush comes.

When cutting boneless cooked ham it is commenced at the shank end, and when about three-quarters sold, the cut end is placed on the machine, and a new cut commenced. In this way there are no bad pieces, but all is mixed and sold.

Sells 150 Lbs. Weekly.

This store averages 150 pounds of bacon weekly, and I am sure it doesn't lose more than a pound and a half of the lot.

Breakfast bacon, now costing 17c per lb. is sold for 25c a lb., Windsor costing 19c a lb. sells for 27c, an average of 45 per cent. on the investment. This represents a good profit on a quick selling line.

Anticipate Customers' Wants.

There is also another feature of the provision counter I might mention. That is every dealer should study the bacon wants of his customers. For instance, Mrs. Jones wants her bacon shaved and no rind on it. Mrs. Smith wants hers very fat, and very thin and no rind. Mrs. Johnston wants hers very lean, medium cut, etc. Very often these women will deal at certain stores just because they get their bacon cut as they want it without having to repeat their wants every time they come to or phone the store.

The provision counter therefore pays in more ways than one, and it should be diligently and carefully looked after.

ANNUAL STAFF GATHERING.

Toronto, Jan. 31.—The third annual dinner of the traveling and office staffs of T. H. Estabrooks Co., Limited, at McConkey's was, as usual, an enjoyable event. T. H. Estabrooks, the president of the company, was present from St. John, N.B. Following the banquet a number of toasts were proposed and responded to. Among the speakers were T. H. Estabrooks, S. Hustwitt, Geo. E. Taylor, N. W. Williams, B. E. Miller, R. W. Vout, A. L. Curry, J. F. Phelan, W. Linder, E. E. Boyd, C. T. Miller, E. McLurg, F. Leech, E. Rolfe, F. Moore. J. H. Boyd, C. Furness, P. Searles and P. R. Smith. The speeches were interspersed with songs, instrumentals, readings and recitations.

CALENDARS FOR 1912.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago, Ill., have sent out an attractive 1912 calendar. The illustration is that of a pretty little summer girl with rosy cheeks, auburn hair, and tattered straw hat, holding an ox-eye daisy in her hand. The background of meadow and stream adds to the attractiveness of the scene. The same firm have also issued a small pansy calendar.

The calendar issued this year by the Alexander Engraving Co. is that of a "miniature artist" beside his easel painting the landscape in the distance. It has been gotten up with a good deal of taste and attractiveness.

OXO CUBES HAVE MADE GOOD
They Have Hosts of Friends

Hardly a pantry but has a place on its shelves for the neat little tins of the carefully packed OXO Cubes—the concentrated goodness of prime beef.

By many, OXO Cubes are used to make a "Beef Drink," and they do make the most health-giving, nourishing drink in the world, but with many of our friends OXO Cubes earn their pantry reputation in numerous other ways.

The good housewife has learned that OXO Cubes give taste to the hash—strength to the gravy—flavor to the stew—and extra goodness to almost every meat dish.

The OXO trade is here to stay—and to grow bigger every week. Are you going after your share of it?

Protect Your Customers

The housewife cannot do good baking with poor baking powder. The absolute purity and reliability of SHIELD BAKING POWDER give it first place in the baking cabinet of your women customers.

SHIELD is a quick seller, sells with least effort and profits best. It's pleasure to sell an article that you know will please.

The "safe and sure" method of selling saves time, expense and avoids dissatisfaction. The "uncertain" products bring doubt as to the reliability of the dealer and eventually the loss of the custom.

Larger Profit---A Cleaner Store

Every merchant loses part of his profit if he sells kerosene and gasolene by the faucet tank and tin measure method. No matter how careful you are, some oil will be spilled. That's loss. The floor becomes saturated and invites fire. The foul odors arising from this condition fill the store and contaminate foodstuffs, resulting in wasted goods and dissatisfied customers.

BOWSER

SELF-MEASURING SYSTEMS

remove these objections. The heavy steel tank is evaporation and leak-proof. The self-measuring pump discharges any amount into the customer's can, counts the gallons and computes the charge. The salesman don't touch it and the measurement is guaranteed.

Ask for free book No. 5 illustrating the complete line. It will bring increased profits. Get in line for more money. We'll help you.

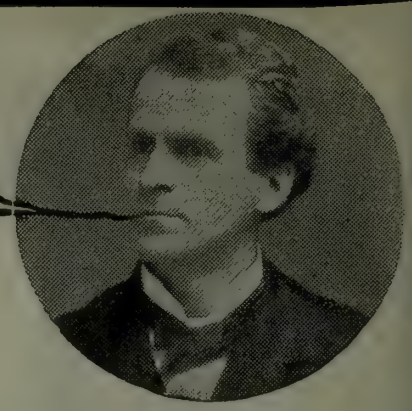
M. Duche & Sons, Manchester, Eng., and New York, N.Y.

RETAIL GROCERS:—

There are trade marks whose worth runs into millions, as they become valuable, for the reasons that fire cannot blot them out and they live successfully through long years of cheap imitations and mushroom competition. The quality of the goods they cover is maintained and value given. From the morass of maple syrup brands that have so deluged the market recently, resulting in a decreased consumption of the product, the MAPLE LEAF BRAND now stands out as the one standard for quality and value the world over. For instance, in February of 1911, Small's Standard Mixture dropped from $4.70 to $4.50; but now brings $4.70, and with reason. Dealers can, without mistake, fight shy of goods offered to the trade at less than jobbers paid, and give a wide berth to brands that were selling last year with low sugar for $4.85, but are now pushed on to the market at $4.50 per case for quarts. Something is wrong. That's all.



MR. SMALL speaks briefly on the Maple Syrup situation. Having been a close student of the business for the past 32 years, his remarks, particularly at this juncture, may be appreciated.

A Toronto Grocer
said to One of Our Travellers

"That Ad. of yours in the last 'Grocer' (January 19th), was the best I ever read. It was so practical and sensible. I am going to try the plan and I am sure I can sell a lot of 40c. Tea where I have been selling cheaper tea in the past."

In case some merchants did not see this Ad. we thought they might like to have their attention called to it and have the opportunity of reading it, so it is here reproduced.

The Way to More Profit on TEA

THE easiest possible way for you to make more profit out of your tea business this year than you did last, is for you to ask your customers to try a package of 40c. Red Rose Tea. We think we can guarantee that at least two out of three of those who try it will order again. They will order it because they will like it better than cheaper teas and because if they use it carefully they will find it will spend farther. They will find it really worth the small difference in price.

If you will use a package first and convince yourself that what we state is a fact you will succeed better with your customers. Worth a good deal to be able to say—"I know it is worth the difference in price because I have tried it."

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

You're Mistaken —That Was A Two-Dollar Bill I Gave You!

When these angry words from a customer ring in your ears, how do you feel? What do you do?

You search your cash drawer for the bill he gave you. An argument follows. There is an angry discussion. But no matter how much you apologize, or what you do to show your regret, you have offended—maybe lost—a customer.

A National Cash Register Positively Prevents All Errors in Making Change.

It protects both you and the customer against such disputes. Provides you with a system that makes it a pleasure for your customers to deal with you. Insures absolute accuracy in every transaction. Cares for your money in a way that no other system does.

You can cut out forever the worrying hours you spend at your store after closing time, looking for the elusive "cash balance." With a National Cash Register, there is always a cash balance—you can tell at a glance the exact amount in your cash drawer. The machine balances your cash for you as each sale is made.

The day you install a National Cash Register you'll notice an increase in your cash receipts. Some retailers tell us that it brings them as much as four dollars a day more. Here is the reason: In every store not protected by a National Cash Register, there are money losses that you can't see. A dime here, and a quarter there—mistakes that can easily occur in the rush of waiting on customers.

A National Cash Register Will Keep Your Books, Check Your Stock, Stop All Disputes, Mistakes, Losses, Protect Your Money, Etc.

as thoroughly as if it were in a safe-deposit vault, and enable you to do without a cashier and serve customers quicker.

More than 1,000,000 merchants the world over use National Cash Registers. They tell us they would not—could not—do without them. For they protect the thing they are in business for—money.

You Can Pay for a National Cash Register Out of the Money It Saves You—In Less Than a Year.

Sales MUST Repeat

Over nine hundred thousand housewives now use FIVE ROSES—
Because it has the Selling Ability.
The same difference that exists between a counter attendant and a good salesman.

Do YOU know what that means?
Just this—
That the first bag must sell the second.

Advertising has a tremendous driving force—yet it can sell only one bag.

Your own salesmanship can make only first sales—trial orders.

The flour itself must have the compelling magnetic influence that draws irresistibly the customer back in spite of price and favor.

Twenty-three years ago there were —all told—only 800 barrels of FIVE ROSES flour sold in the world.

To-day there flows out of the big FIVE ROSES mills a constant uniform stream—10,500 barrels a day. Can any sane person deny in the face of such brutal facts that FIVE ROSES must possess a compelling sales force?

FIVE ROSES will not sell itself—no flour will.

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

But once introduced, Brother Grocer, your trade is riveted for all time.

A woman can no more give up the FIVE ROSES habit than she can abandon her keen ambition for better baking.

Consider merely the dollar-and-cents side—just think how safe your trade might be—

If YOU could sell FIVE ROSES flour.

Maybe you can—maybe you can't, for we don't sell everybody, remember that.

Write our nearest office—perhaps we can come together.

Write NOW.

A Quick "Turn-Over"

will soon take place in your fish department, now that the rush season is about to commence. Fish foods are eaten the year round, so you should sell only the best in order to keep the fish trade coming your way throughout the remainder of the year when the demand is not so keen.

"Thistle" Brand Haddies and Herring

The name and the fame of the "Thistle" Brand of fish have brought credit and honor to the producers, and will bring money to the retailer.

The "Thistle" label on Haddies, Kippered Herring, Herring in Tomato Sauce, and Tunny Fish, is known throughout the Dominion to guarantee the virtues of cleanliness, genuineness and natural flavor of the freshly-caught and instantly-canned fish, just as they are taken from their ocean home.

The cleanliness of "Thistle" Brand is always proverbial —their flavor is fine—they are genuine always.

A big tribute to this brand is that there are times when the demand exceeds the supply. So get your supply in time.

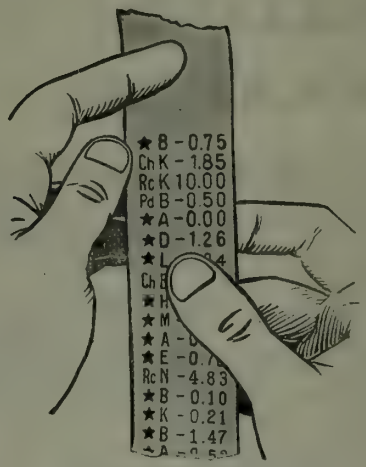
HOW DO YOU KEEP TRACK OF THE DETAILS OF YOUR BUSINESS



THIS WAY or THIS WAY

There are innumerable questions for which you cannot find an answer.

Maybe there is a shortage—and you cannot account for it. Someone paid a bill—and you have no record of it.

You paid someone else's bill—you cannot remember which it was.

You never know how much money ought to be in your cash drawer.

You are not sure that all goods sold on account were properly charged for.

You do not know which clerk made the mistakes—or which clerk sold the most goods.

You are trusting too much to luck—depending too much on your memory.

The National Cash Register keeps track of all the details for you.

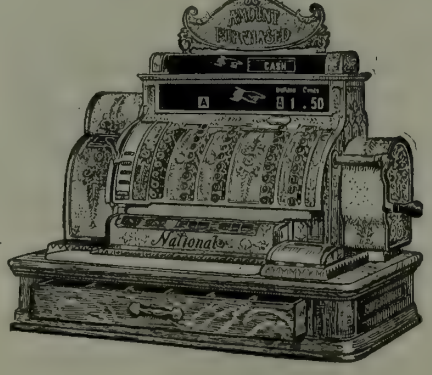
You can see at a glance—any time during the day—a printed record of every transaction that has taken place in your store.

How many cash sales have been made.
How many charge sales have been made.
How much money has been received on account.
How much cash ought to be in the cash drawer.
How much goods each clerk has sold.
How many times your cash drawer was opened—by whom—and why.

Keeps you in absolute touch with every detail of your business, to a penny, every day.

Balances your day's business in five minutes. Stops all guess work. Takes care of all the details, giving you time for the important things.

The National Cash Register compels everyone in your store to make an accurate record of each transaction.



You can pay for a National Cash Register out of the money it saves you. Investigate. Write for booklet.

Until the advent of the Enterprise, the perfect cutting principle was unknown in a meat chopper.

That principle means that the Enterprise is far better value to you than an ordinary chopper can possibly be. This is the difference of the Enterprise:---Four-bladed steel knife revolves against the inner surface of a perforated steel plate.

ENTERPRISE

Meat and Food Choppers

do not mangle nor mash, but cut--cut like shears. When you add to this principle the widely-known Enterprise Quality, you know why the Enterprise gives such service as it does give. Why it is a time, money and labor saver in the long run.

Enterprise parts are interchangeable. And under Enterprise methods of manufacture, this means something. It means that the part made ten years from now will absolutely, exactly, take its place in the machine made to-day.

It is worth while to insist on the Enterprise. It means better results all along the line.

Whatever the article that bears this name--Fruit Presses, Cherry Stoners, Coffee Mills--it is an article made on honor, to last.

Line Up Against the Parcels Post

Every Merchant This Day Should Do His Duty—Farm Papers and Members of Both Sides in House of Commons Favoring It—How It Will Tend to Affect Small Town and Rural Communities—Post Master General Appreciates Merchants' Opposition.

One would naturally suppose that farm journals should work for the best interests of the men they presume to interest and serve. Such is not always the case. Here we have Farm and Dairy, a farmer's paper, booming the passing of Parcels Post legislation—a subject that paper has evidently only looked at from a superficial point of view.

After referring to F. D. Monk's fruitless efforts to get this legislation through the last parliament, Farm and Dairy gives the credit of knocking it in the head to the Retail Merchants' Association. All of which shows the results that can be obtained through organization.

"We can all understand," says Farm and Dairy further, "why the members of the Retail Merchants' Association would oppose a bill that would make it easy for producer and consumer to come closer together. We cannot understand, however, why the interests of a few thousand merchants should be allowed to stand in the way of the greater prosperity of of the millions of Canadian citizens. Middlemen are necessary; but the fewer of them we have between producers and consumers the more satisfactory will it be to both classes."

—On the face of it, this may be a plausible contention. But let this farm paper consider the consequences TO THE FARMER that result in his sending out of his own community or away from his own town or city, for all his goods.

Where the Money Will Go.

At present time mail order houses are doing a big business in many rural sections of Canada. With a system of Parcels Post in vogue we may easily expect this business to increase a great deal—probably two or three fold, probably more. If such will be the case—and the farm journal will no doubt be pleased to acknowledge it—the farmers are not going to spend as much money in their own communities and in their own towns, the prosperity of which directly depends on the amount of money SPENT in them.

Reasoning further along the line of these self-evident truths, we see that towns and communities will go backward in progress, or at least will not go ahead as rapidly as if the bulk of the money earned were spent there. Every farmer realizes the value of a good farm in close proximity to a good live, growing town. It certainly means to the farmer a great deal. The poorer the town the poorer the farm. Every dollar he sends away for goods he can buy at home, tends to depreciate the value of his own community and therefore of his own farm.

What one farmer sends away for in a year might not amount to anything appreciable. But let every farmer in a county follow suit and the merchants of the county town are going to suffer and through them the town and county—AND THE FARMERS.

Where Support Comes From.

Parcels Post will tend to this result. The mail order houses are after it. Few farmers are bothering themselves but some politicians anxious to get their names in Hansard think the country needs it.

One would venture to state that if Farm and Dairy would make a study of why some villages and towns throughout the country are not prospering, they would quickly be forced to trace the cause to the money that is sent out of these places and which could and should be spent at home.

If retailers are necessary as that paper admits, why advocate from producer to consumer at all? If they are necessary—and they are necessary not only for the convenience of the public but to the growth and stability of villages, towns and cities—then they should be assisted and encouraged and not be put out of business.

On the other hand are mail order houses a necessity? If they are not why legislate in favor of them at the expense of the merchant who is admittedly a necessity.

These are some points farm papers should take into consideration if they will serve best the future prosperity of their readers.

In the House of Commons members seem to be "falling over one another," to use a common expression, to place Parcels Post legislation on the statutes.

Last week in the House, J. E. Armstrong, member for East Lambton, and W. F. MacLean, South York, two members of the government, indulged in some "gentle" repartee to determine which should have the right of way in bringing the discussion forward.

Without going into details of the "quarrel," there were opinions expressed by Hon. Mr. Lemieux, former Postmaster General, and Hon. Mr. Pelletier, the present occupant of that position.

The former referred to his record as administrator of the post office department. He had favored cheap rates as regards, among other things, parcels post. It will therefore be seen that the question of parcel post is favorably considered by members on both sides of the house so that it behooves Canadian merchants to be on the lookout.

Ministers Traveling Cautiously.

A note of warning to other members was, however, sounded by Hon. Mr. Pelletier, which should be taken advantage of by dealers. While he probably would like to see legislation enacted, he is dubious about the opposition from retailers.

He noted the difficulties in the way of establishing a comprehensive Parcel Post system in Canada. The express companies would take the probable short-haul business, while the Post Office Department would have to shoulder the deficits of the unprofitable long-haul business. It would involve a new postal equipment for street boxes and mail cars, and the government must also consider the opposition of the country merchant to the competition of the mail order houses. In conclusion, he believed that considerable reduction could be effected in cable rates in Canada and Great Britain, and he promised that the government would do its best to carry out a policy of postal expansion.

While the postmaster-general is wavering, as indicated by his speech, is the time for the merchant to strike and strike hard. Every association in Canada should forward resolutions against the proposal, and every individual retailer should wire his opposition both to Hon. Mr. Pelletier and the member for his constituency. This thing can be defeated if the trade will get down to business. Otherwise it will go through, the mail order houses will gain and Canadian merchants lose.

Effect of Personal Service.

At the same time every dealer should fortify his business against mail order houses, parcels post or no parcel post. He can give the personal attention—in other words the personal service—to each individual customer that cannot be extended by catalogue houses. This personal service idea ought to be strongly featured. Service counts more than any other thing in retaining and gaining customers.

Western Business Built on $70 Capital

Half went to Rent of Store and Rest to Purchase of a Stock —G. Nicholson's Courageous Venture—Has Built Up a Good Business.

By D. Williams.

On the Western Canadian plains, where towns are the growth of a few days and cities the product of as many years, we often hear of merchants who have made rapid successes.

A little frame shack is built in a day or two, filled with goods suitable or as near as the circumstances of the case will permit for the requirement of the incoming immigrants and settlers. A lively trade is done, the store growing with the development of the surrounding country. If crops are good and circumstances favorable, an excellent business is often soon built up and the merchant who began with only a few dollars becomes in a short time that would seem incredible to easterners, to use a western phrase, "well heeled."

In the older established towns and cities in the West, however, competition among traders is just as keen as anywhere else in Canada and it is seldom a case occurs where such a marked success is scored in so short a time as by the gentleman whose place of business is shown in the accompanying cut.

Began With $70 Capital.

Fifteen months ago the store premises on the corner of Ellice and Maryland Streets, Winnipeg, became vacant and was taken by G. Nicholson, who had been doing a little grocery business in a small shack in another part of the city. When starting upon his new venture, Mr. Nicholson had only the limited capital of seventy dollars. Thirty-five of this had to go for rent and the other thirty-five was invested in stock, leaving him without a single nickel the day he opened his new store. From the very first, however, success seemed to come his way and to-day the Modern Grocery is one of the finest grocery stores on Ellice Street.

Mr. Nicholson is a young man with plenty of courage, as is exemplified in his daring venture which few would have had the nerve to have undertaken.

He had been for some time a clerk in the employ of Hendry's, on Portage Ave., before deciding to start out for himself. He is a believer in modern methods, watching with keen interest the business systems of doing things often recited in The Canadian Grocer and other sources of information. His store with its Christmas decorations, as shown in the cut, was a model of tasteful arrangement.

Interior view of the Nicholson store in Winnipeg.

TRAVELERS' WAGE WAR.

Chicago, Illinois, February 7.—Plans were made in Chicago by the directors of the National Association of Traveling Men to wage a relentless war throughout the country against the "unfair" methods used by hotel keepers, baggagemen and railroads "to the injury of the traveler." To make the war effective the travelers voted to increase the directorate from 6 to 24 members.

The traveling men charge that there are numerous hotels where it is almost impossible for a guest to get the same room twice. The price usually is "boosted."

That railroads, by limiting to 150 pounds the amount of baggage that can be carried, and by attempting to do away with the wardrobe trunk, are unjust to the traveler who uses the road once or more a week, as compared with the traveler who uses it only once a year.

The Management of a Retail Business

No. 6—Cash Discounts—Continued.

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

Refer back to last week's article, and observe that No. 1 had $135 outstanding accounts at the end of the fourth month. These he has begun to overhaul in vigorous fashion. Most of the amount was incurred during the first month, and he has found that he is not only deprived of the use of the money, but that the customers most likely are withholding further trade because of their indebtedness. He has, therefore, written each a polite, but firm letter, requesting a settlement or at least a substantial payment on account. And his appeal has not been in vain, for he has collected all but $45, and this amount he has concluded he will never collect without recourse to law. In the meantime, his coupon system has taken hold more firmly than he had dared to hope, and all but two of the coupon bills receivable had been paid at maturity. These two had applied for further coupon books, but he had held the rule of no further credit inviolate, and declined, preferring to lose the customers rather than break into his plan, which had worked so well, though only in operation such a short time. He had also discouraged, as far as possible, cash transactions across the counter, preferring to sell a book of coupons rather than make a small cash sale.

Business is Extended.

He had become known as the coupon merchant, and had bought a second horse and delivery wagon costing $225, which was necessary to meet the demands of his extending trade. Furthermore, letters had been sent to all the farmers in the neighborhood, asking them to bring in their butter and eggs, and such other produce as they might have to sell. Many of them came, and he paid them the best market rates. They, too, bought coupons, and the coupons brought them back with more produce. Some of these farmers, having taken coupons for produce, found that they were short of cash, for lines of goods which our merchant did not handle, for instance, dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, etc. Here was a temptation to branch out into foreign lines, but he wisely concluded that this might not only lead him out of his depth, but also incur the enmity of other merchants, and perhaps induce them to add his line to theirs in retaliation.

Works With Other Dealers.

He arranged, therefore, to have one store in each line foreign to his own, redeem his coupons for merchandise, when presented by out of town customers. These dealers began trading at our man's store in consequence, and he at theirs, for his needs, to their mutual benefit and satisfaction. His business grew apace. Besides $100 cash business, he had sold during the fifth month 300 coupon books, half of them taking their 2½ per cent. or 25c. per book discount. On May 31st, his unredeemed coupons amounted to $400, so that his sales, with cash sales $100, and coupons outstanding last month $550, had been $3,250, less $37.50 discount on coupons. His purchases, including produce from his farmer customers, had been lighter this month, because of his enlarged stock at the beginning of the month, nevertheless, he had bought $1,500, securing a trade discount of 5 per cent. on two-thirds of the amount, and 2 per cent. cash discount on all.

Standing of Business.

His note at the bank has, of course, been paid, and thus far he has not made a new loan. His accounts stand thus:—

We have had to arbitrarily adjust the merchant's personal account by drawing $100 per month for the five months, provision for which had been omitted. Starting with $3,500, his net gain in 5 months thus stands at $1,348.83. His total sales to date equal $9,062.50, showing a gain of nearly 15 per cent. of sales, and 38 per cent. on capital.

How No. 2 Has Fared.

And what has No. 2 Mr. Shopkeeper been doing in the meantime? He has felt the keen edge of his competitor's superior business acumen, and is beginning to think that something must be wrong. The new delivery wagon across the way has confused him, and he cannot understand why the farmers are going to No. 1 with their produce. He has been outclassed in fresh produce, and in a number of ways he has made mental comparisons with No. 1, in all or which he has come off second best. A large number of his cash customers have left him, and while he has sold $1,200 on credit, he has only made $100 cash sales. Collections, on the other hand, despite his efforts, have been disappointingly slow, only $600 being gathered in. Several of his creditors have intimated that his limit has been reached, but he has paid off $500 of his liabilities, and made purchases amounting to $900 nevertheless.

	$4,323.97

The personal accounts $300, plus $200 cash drawn, equal $100 per month for 5 months, as in the case of No. 1, and his net gain is $823.97, according to the books, and supposing his receivables will be paid in full. A radical change will be necessary if Mr. Shopkeeper is to survive his first 6 months' trading. The writer has intended keeping him in business for a year, but the coils are drawing tighter and tighter about him, solvent as he appears to be, and perhaps it would be just as well to close him out next month, and see if we cannot find a more worthy competitor for No. 1.

Each Should Watch His Own Business

When a Merchant Gives His Attention to What Some One Else is Doing He Takes His Mind Off His Own Trade—Writer Says it is Up to Manufacturer Not Retailer to Fix Price—True Association Work is Co-operative Not Co-ersive.

* By Henry Johnson, Jr.

Last week I wrote up the happenings in a Canadian town wherein there was evidently a sort of general free-for-all fight on prices. Things have reached the usual stage where each is ready to aver that the other fellow did it and, while each had originally thought he "could stand it as long as anybody," all are about ready to seek relief from somewhere. This is quite usual, especially in small places where everybody knows everybody else so well that they virtually belong to one family; and we all know what happens in family quarrels. The fight is fierce for a time.

Then somebody's nerves become completely unstrung, and he starts a whimper which soon becomes general. That is the time for the sanest one to come to his senses and begin to mend matters by quitting the bickering and going back to his serious work. Those men are about ready for some strong one among them to go onto a safe and sane basis of selling goods for what they are worth, without regard to what the others do—and he will do it. The others will gradually follow him, and common sense will reign again—with increased business and profit for all.

Too Much Expected.

It is a common mistake in newly organized towns that the new association members fondly expect that all troubles are immediately to be done away with. The new toy is so very bright and pretty that they thing they can do anything with it—all at once. No allowance is made for the slow conservatism of all growth. Everything is expected to come at once, ready made, without any process of development.

The organizer is often to blame because, in his enthusiasm and anxiety to make a showing for himself, he promises more than he can possibly deliver. The worst thing he can possibly promise is that there will be no more price-cutting. This because the regulation of prices must always rest with each merchant to a very considerable extent; in fact, so far as the association is concerned, he must be absolutely free to name his own figures. These are fundamentals which I do not think call for further discussion.

I do want to discuss price maintenance, however, because I firmly believe in it and I know it can be made to work. But it can be made effective only in the right way. Inasmuch as this problem has puzzled many strong thinkers for an unknown period, we should go about it thoughtfully, carefully, endeavoring to be sure we are right before we go ahead.

Recommends Pacific Coast Plan.

The one best plan I know about is what is known as the Pacific Coast Plan, somewhat similar to the contract selling plan. And what is the essence of that plan? It is that the manufacturer, or producer, shall fix a retail price on his goods, said price being the minimum below which his goods must not be sold. The details need not be taken up here. What we want to know about is the effect of that plan. It is that the merchant buys a given article with the knowledge, say, that the minimum price thereon, fixed by the maker, is 13c. each, 2 for 25c. That settles that. The particular article in question will be sold at that price. Articles not so regulated may be sold at any old figures with which the retailer may be satisfied.

What is the result? Suppose we are talking about grape juice, and that one brand is sold under this plan, while others are not so protected. You can see that each dealer will display, push and sell the protected article and as much as possible he will hide and discourage the sale of the others. This course of action will soon lead other makers of grape juice to adopt the same plan, so the question of price on grape juice will soon become a secondary consideration and the goods will gain or lose distinction on the basis of character and quality.

No Time for Petty Bickerings.

What applies to grape juice will soon apply to other lines. Then price will become secondary on those lines and the competition will become a question of relative merit. Merchants will inevitably, almost automatically, sell the goods which give satisfaction and yield a living profit, and they will be so busy doing this higher character of business that they will have no time for petty local bickerings.

This is much slower than issuing a sort of edict that hereafter thus and so will be the rule; but it is sure and sound.

Association work should not include the fixing of prices. This is a matter with which it can seldom deal successfully. In fact, price regulation by local associations can only be handled after all other things have been done, and at that stage of the game regulation will hardly be necessary, because prices will be generally and practically maintained.

Stand Well With Competitors.

My correspondent quoted a letter from Burr Brothers, Rockford, Illinois. I am glad he did that because the Burrs are excellent exemplars of what I have said. The peculiarly sound position of those big successful grocers is evinced fully and completely by the fact that they stand well with all their competitors. They operate cash stores and credit stores, and the difference in their cash and credit margins is best told by Mr. Burr in his letter. Yet they sell loads and loads of goods to retail grocers right in Rockford. And why? Because, service for service, every man who buys from them and competes with them can sell at the same prices and make money along side of them. The Burrs could belong to an association which did not seek to control prices—at least, I think they could. I hope Mr. Burr may tell us more about this phase of the discussion.

I said the Burrs were good grocers—and they are. They are skillfully watchful of the quality of their merchandise and service; and they charge fairly, in a business like manner for what they do. Where they carry accounts and deliver, they charge fairly for that kind of service. Where they sell goods over the counter for spot cash, without delivery, they charge fairly for that kind of service. Hence, their position is impregnable because they are right. Their business has distinctive individuality and character.

Each Watch His Own Business.

Let my Canadian friends think over this thing a bit further. Let them look within their own business to find the answer. Let them study goods, intrinsic values, cost of doing business, cost and character of service. Then let them fix their own prices, based carefully on conditions each in his own store. And let them hustle, with an eye single to rendering full service—and getting fairly paid for it. If each one follows out this prescription, my word for it, he will soon be so busy minding his own business that he will have no time to worry about what his neighbor is doing.

*The writer of this article is one of the most successful dealers on the continent. He has spent almost 30 years in the retail grocery business and is well equipped to answer questions and smooth out difficulties with which others may have met.

And, by the way, did you ever think of that? That if you mind your competitor's business he will flourish and you will fade away? Yes; it is so. And why? Because his business will then have double attention, while yours will have none. Of course, if he follows your example and worries about you as much as you do about him, this will not work out. No, curiously enough, things will not really "even up" under this treatment, as you might expect. Instead, the result will be that there will be two failures instead of one.

I had hoped to touch one or two other points in this article. The important thing, however, is to clear away all that rubbish with which my correspondent cumbered himself when he thought he was "making a case" against the others and the association, so that he may begin over again to attend to his own business.

Programme for Dominion Guild Meeting

Annual Convention of Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild—Opens at Toronto on Monday—Will be in Session for two Days—Many Important Subjects to be Dealt With.

The annual convention of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild to be held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 12 and 13, promises to be an interesting and important session. The addresses and subjects for the discussion as set down in the programme indicate this.

The convention will open at 10 a.m., Monday, when Mayor Geary, of Toronto, will deliver an address of welcome to the wholesale trade. The balance of the morning will be given over to the minutes of the last annual meeting, the presenting and discussion on the financial report and the appointment of press and nominating committees. Resolutions based upon suggestions by the delegates will also be dealt with.

The afternoon session will commence at 2.30 p.m. when President Hugh Blain will present his address. Zeph. Hebert, of Montreal, will also deliver an address. Any spare time will be devoted to new business. In the evening at 7.30, a complimentary banquet to be held at the King Edward Hotel will be tendered the delegates by the Toronto wholesale trade, when addresses will be delivered by prominent speakers.

Tuesday morning will open by a discussion on the contract selling plan and its importance. "The rights of the trade and manufacturers" is the title of an address to be given by E. F. B. Johnston, K.C. During the morning, addresses will also be delivered by members of the trade on provincial matters, by members of the Retail Merchants' Association as well as by manufacturers.

The programme for the afternoon session of the last day comprises a paper on "Association Loyalty," by Fred T. Smye, of Hamilton, while H. C. Beckett also of Hamilton, will read one on "Loyalty to Manufacturers." L. J. Ball will give an address on "The Credit Exchange." A discussion on canned goods for 1912 will follow while the proceedings will wind up with the report of the nominating committee and election of officers.

The purpose of the convention as set down in the programme, "is to accomplish something for your benefit. It is admitted there are evils and demoralizing practices in business and the object of this association is to overcome them. Discussions are to be on general policy of the conduct of business along good, fair, honorable lines. Discussions on individual grievances are out of order."

It is noted that there are over one hundred and fifty wholesale grocery firms in the Dominion. The traveling staff exceeds one thousand.

ACADIA SUGAR CO. SUFFERS BIG LOSS BY FIRE.

Halifax, N.S., Feb. 8.—A loss of over $1,000,000 was suffered by the Acadia Sugar Refining Company on Thursday night last, when their Woodside plant situated on the Dartmouth side of the harbor was totally destroyed by fire. The insurance is distributed over a large number of companies and is estimated at upwards of $800,000. One man, Thomas Henneberry, perished in the flames, while several others suffered slight injury.

The fire commenced in a large wooden warehouse on the water front, where 15,000 barrels of sugar were stored. From here the flames spread to the seven storey brick structure across the tracks which constitutes the refinery proper, and which was soon enveloped by the fire. Besides the refined sugar, more than 40,000 bags of raw sugar were destroyed. As a result of the fire about 180 men will be thrown out of employment.

The Woodside refinery was built in 1885, being taken over in 1893 by the the Acadia Sugar Refinery Co. The cost of the plant at that time was nearly one million dollars. Since it was acquired by the Acadia Company, up-to-date machinery has frequently been installed. Only a year ago, some $80,000 worth of new machinery was put in.

The company also have the Richmond plant, located on the opposite side of the harbor to the one destroyed. It was shut down a short time ago for the annual overhaul but will be rapidly put into running shape and within a week or so the company hope to be able to care for all business.

MEETING OF HAMILTON GROCERS.

Hamilton, Ont., Feb. 8.—There was a large attendance at the monthly meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association on Thursday last. The Provincial Association question which came up at the last meeting was further discussed and a committee consisting of Messrs. J. O. Carpenter, J. Forth and J. A. McIntosh appointed to confer with the Toronto and London associations on the question.

Arrangements were made for the entertaining of the Brantford grocers when they play their return euchre match with the local association.

Strenuous complaints were made that wholesalers were encroaching on the retailers' ground, by selling direct to consumers.

NEW SALADA TEA FACTORY

Just Completed by P. C. Larkin & Co., at Montreal.

Montreal, Feb. 8.—P. C. Larkin & Co. have completed the reconstruction of their building on the corner of St. Paul and St. Sulpice Streets here, and now have a thoroughly modern and well equipped plant. Heretofore all the Salada tea for Canada and the United States was packed at the Toronto plant. To meet increasing necessities, temporary quarters were taken, the old building torn down, with the exception of the outside walls of the two lower storeys, and thoroughly reconstructed in steel and concrete, with three storeys added.

Every precaution has been taken for cleanliness and a most effective exhaust system installed for removing every suspicion of dust.

Every modern device for efficient and rapid handling has been installed in the packing room, including a machine which receives the packages from a chute, draws them in and labels them without dinging the lead, and delivers them complete to the packers at the rate of twenty-eight per minute, where they are speedily packed in cases, which, in turn, are nailed up by the automatic nailing machines.

The possibility of loss by fire has been reduced to a minimum by the installation of one of the most complete fire alarm systems on the continent.

WHAT THE DEALER'S INTEREST MEANS.

"Give me the confidence of the grocer and you can have his business—temporarily—I will get it eventually."

These words, spoken at the recent convention of the Grocery and Allied Press Association in New York, by Fred Mason, vice-president and general manager of the Shredded Wheat Company, contain a whole philosophy in themselves.

Mr. Mason is the apostle of sentiment and goodwill in business, and admitted that he and the firms with which he had been connected of recent years had received easily $10,000 worth of free publicity annually, simply because he had had the goodwill of the press fraternity.

At the same convention an incident was related where a huge United States manufacturing firm, producing a line that was a household word and sold by probably every grocer on the continent, thoughtlessly undertook to place a new specialty on the market, on a basis that would give the retailer practically no net profit. The injustice of this to the retailer was pointed out to the manufacturer, who immediately saw the point. He might force this line on the market, but at great expense to himself in selling cost and the lasting enmity of his friend, the retailer, who would be handling the new line on the no profit margin. He made a radical change in his plans and the retailer has been given ample, even generous consideration.

The retailer is entitled to fair treatment in the pricing of specialties as in other matters, and the manufacturer who establishes a reputation for fair treatment and sets about to gain and deserve the confidence of the retailer is building upon solid ground.

As no retail establishment can permanently prosper where the selling staff are underpaid and disaffected, so no manufacturing concern can make the progress the merits of its goods warrants, without taking into consideration the retailers who constitute the ultimate selling force of his organization—in other words, without seeking to deserve their confidence.

A BENEFICENT CLERGYMAN.

A reverend gentleman has opened a "cost price" grocery store in New York. It is reported that his entire stock was sold out in two hours and that housewives fought in bargain-counter fashion for supplies. So delighted is he with the success of the venture he intends opening up several others.

Only a man of means could, of course, do this. But what will he do when some disgruntled housewife who has received some bad apples or potatoes and wants to have them exchanged? What conception will he have of shrinkage, or how will he be able to smooth over the difficulties that arise when a woman finds a bad egg or two among her dozen? What about the extension of credits and the hundred and one other troubles such a man is bound to meet with doing business in such a way? And what thanks will he get?

How long will this charity last? He must assuredly be a long-suffering man to carry on such a business. And there must be money in the ministry to allow of such beneficence. 'Tis a wonder Andrew Carnegie hasn't thought of this plan long ere this.

ATTEND TO COLLECTIONS NOW.

It is some time now since anything has been said in these columns on the score of collections. This temporary avoidance of the topic has not been due to any lack of material; for at the present moment collections are very much in order.

The merchant who meets with the fullest measure of success, judged from a purely financial viewpoint, is the one who either conducts his business on a cash basis or sees to it that his credit customers pay up promptly and in full. Collections are in order all the year around. This is one of the particular seasons, however, when it is most urgently necessary to get outstanding accounts settled.

In the first place, the dealer has finished stock taking, has closed his books for the old year and is starting the business of the new. It is highly desirable that the start be made on a sound basis. The carrying of heavy book debts is by no means conducive to soundness and the first of the year should see the inauguration of a brisk and determined collection campaign. As an additional reason it might be urged that the dealer has plenty of time on his hands just at present to look after it. Letters should be sent to every person on the books of the firm and, in cases of extreme obduracy, it would pay the merchant to make personal calls. Finally, the dealer is in need of the money now. This need is felt the whole year around for that matter, but ready cash will be found particularly desirable at this juncture. The grocer is entering upon a heavy buying season and good collections now will considerably lighten his financial burdens later.

PROFITS IN BY-PRODUCTS.

A great many factories, milling companies and pork packing establishments make a large portion, if, sometimes, not all of their net profits through the sale of by-products in this business.

What about the grocer helping out in his profits by the sale of by-products in his business? Perhaps the most important of these is boxes and barrels and waste paper, which, if carefully looked after, will give a good return in a year. Take the lids off the boxes carefully without splitting them. Open barrels without tearing them to pieces. Then they can be sold. Waste paper can now be put in baling machines and sold to paper manufacturers.

Dealers also purchase goods in bottles, jars, bags and numerous other containers, which, when empty, have their value. Corks can be re-used, while second-hand bottles can be refilled or sold to junk dealers.

If the dealer throws away much waste paper, get a press and bale it up.

There are many such things about the store, which, if carefully looked after, can be turned into money which in some cases means a clear profit.

RECIPROCITY NEEDED IN STAMPS.

That phrase, "Please send six cents in stamps to cover cost of mailing," is becoming a regular bugaboo, not only to the one from whom the stamps are wanted, but to the one to whom the stamps come. The trouble, of course, is caused by the proximity of two countries—two countries with different postal systems.

An illustration of the nuisance which the interchange of stamps causes, comes to hand this week, a manufacturer of the United States writing that he has Canadian stamps to the value of $60, and asking where he can get United States stamps, or money, for these. His trouble is but an example of that experienced by many business men.

The manager of a Montreal concern, speaking of this matter, states that he undertakes to exchange stamps for his customers. Thus, if a dealer in the United States has a number of King Gorge stamps sent him, to defray the expenses of mailing some catalogue or other he will pay face value for these. If a Canadian, on the other hand, gets a number of U. S. stamps he will take these and dispose of them later.

By such means much of the inconvenience is obviated, but how much better it would be if there were a recognized method, whereby a Canadian, getting a number of stamps of the United States, could exchange these for stamps of Canada, and vice versa. There would not have to be any ratio of exchange. Both stamps have the government of a great country behind them. Both are worth their face value.

So much has been said for, and so much more against reciprocity—in Canada at least—that the word seems something to be avoided. Yet what a boon it would be to business men if there were reciprocity in stamps—if a man getting a number of these from the States, could send his office boy to the nearest post office and have them exchanged for an equivalent of the Canadian issue. No one would be the loser. The exchange between the Canadian and United States Post Offices Departments could be carried on as easily as is the exchange of bills between various banks. No one would be the loser. Who can say how many would gain?

SELLING MILK FROM HORSEBACK.

Laws have to be carefully prepared and properly worded these days if the enacters would have them obeyed in the manner aimed at.

Many ways are used to evade the law on some slight technicality, although their meaning and aim may be disobeyed. Selling milk from horseback so as to avoid the Iowa law, which requires those who sell milk from "stores or vehicles" to pay a license, is the latest method of evading the law.

Grocers, when they have laws enacted to protect or improve their interests, should see they are so strong that possible offenders can find no loopholes whereby to escape.

THE VALUE OF JUDGMENT.

A youngster who had been sent for a parcel of rice came home with a hole in one corner of the parcel and a trail of rice extending far down the street. The housewife was not at all pleased with this and gave vent to her feelings in words which were not at all complimentary to the grocer, and finished by saying, "We'll go to Jones' after this for our groceries."

This shows the folly of grocers using bags that are too light in weight. Light weight bags have their place in the grocery store, but not in the handling of rice or similar articles. Judgment should be used by merchants and clerks in these cases so that customers may not be displeased.

Nor is it confined only to the use of bags that judgment is needful on the part of the grocer and his assistants, but in many other things that appear in the business from time to time. Selection of goods is one thing that might be mentioned. When an order is received by phone or in other ways in which the customer does not choose the goods personally, clerks should be careful to send the quality of goods that will be sure to please the customer.

FIGHT PARCELS POST.

Does the average retail dealer realize to the fullest extent the danger that the Parcels Post movement spells for him? Although there is nothing definite in the way of legislation now pending in Canada, the movement has not subsided. Many of the members of the present House of Commons are strong advocates of Parcels Post and are only waiting an opportunity to force the issue. It may not come during the session now in course, but there is no certainty that it will not. Like the sword of Damocles, it hangs over the head of the retailer in Canada, suspended by a thread.

Much depends on the outcome of the fight now being waged so briskly in the United States. If the agitators of the measure win there, it will not be long before the question comes up in this country. That contingency may arise, of course, before the question has been fought out to a finish by our American cousins.

In the meantime, the Canadian retail dealers should not for a moment lose sight of the matter. The old saying, "in times of peace prepare for war," might well be applied. Continuous, unremitting, emphatic voicing of the strong reasons why Parcels Post would have a bad effect, will go a long way to defeat the movement.

The merchant who knows all about his competitors, what they are doing and how many prices they are cutting, doesn't have much time to look after his own business. The natural result is failure, or, at best, slow progress.

Adequate personal service on the part of any dealer, to a customer inclined to send away for goods, will do the mail order houses out of a lot of business. Let your customers know you have a keen interest in their wants and welfare.

Butter affected with mould loses its value on the market. Dampness, bad ventilation, medium temperatures and absence of light favors the growth of mould, but the opposite conditions will retard or even stop its growth. These opposite conditions—dryness, good ventilation and light—should be maintained.

Lesson 11--Course in Card Writing

Flat Stroke Fancy Lettering, an Easily Executed Condensation of Old English, as Taught by the Edwards Short Cut Course—How to Make Illuminated Letters.

There are times when a fancy letter is desirable in show card writing, yet no fancy letter should be used at any time which cannot be easily read at a glance. The Old English letter in its original or correct form is not only hard to make, but is so decorative as to cause the average person some trouble to make out what it is intended for.

Absence of Frills.

The flat stroke fancy lettering as illustrated in the accompanying plate (No. 11) has the elements of the Old English with the absence of the frills or superfluous fine lines and ornamentation, which are not only unnecessary, but impractical.

This alphabet consists of a series of cymas, half cymas and crescents, with very few straight lines. This greatly facilitates speed.

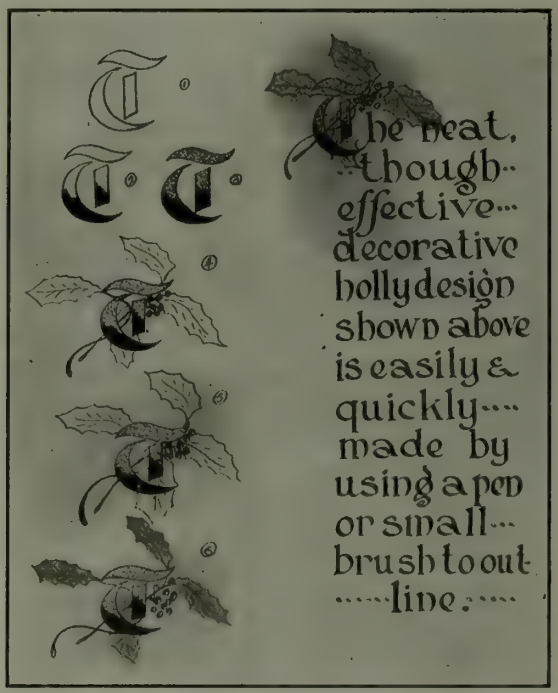
Where to Use This Letter.

Flat stroke fancy letters, like Old English, must not be used to any extent on any card, for it is not readable enough. At no time must a word be spelled in full in capitals. The capital letters are used only at the beginning of the word or as a fancy capital to be used at the beginning of a paragraph of Roman lower case lettering as is illustrated in the accompanying card. The lower case letters, which will be dealt with in the next lesson, are very much more legible and can be made with more or less speed.

An otherwise very plain card may be made attractive by the use of an Old English capital letter worked into a design at the upper left hand corner, as shown in the above card.

How to Make Illuminated Capitals.

The attached series explains fairly well how the design is carried out. In the first place, the letter is made in outline, as shown in No. 1. The second move is to fill in the lower portion of the letter in solid color, in this case black. Then the upper part is stippled or dotted with a pen or the end of a very small, pointed brush. The design is then sketched in in outline, being careful not to run over the face of the letter.



The neat, though effective decorative holly design shown above is easily & quickly made by using a pen or small brush to out line.

The illustration to the left shows the method employed in executing the illuminated capital designs as used in the accompanying card.

The design is a holly spray, with the veining of the leaves shown. It is very simple and quickly done. The next operation is the rubbing in of a dry color to give a shaded relief background. The dry color may be secured at any hardware store or paint shop. Either yellow, green or a mild shade of blue may be used to advantage. Dip a piece of cotton batting in the dry color and rub it out on another piece of card or paper to get it well into the batting before trying it on the show card. Then rub gently until the desired depth of shade is arrived at. Do not get too deep a shade, but a nice, even tint.

After you have rubbed the tint in well apply a stronger tint of green on the leaves by mixing the dry green with a little mucilage and water. If a different shade of green is desired, add a touch of yellow. Practice will tell you more than a pen can—blue and yellow make green. Try different proportions until you get the desired shade.

When you have the shade you think is most natural to the holly, apply it evenly, letting the veinings show through, then mix a little red for the berries in the same way. You will find that with practice you can get a very nice effect, which will illuminate a card and take off the plain appearance.

In some cases the first word may be made entirely of this fancy letter, using the capital and lower case.

The Brush to Use.

A No. 7 red sable flat brush in albata is the brush used in lettering plate No. 11, which, of course, was about twice the the size of the reproduction here shown or a little less. Very little explanation is needed, as the arrows and numbers give a very correct idea how to proceed.

We might suggest the advisability, however, of practising the cymas and half cymas to quite an extent, as this style of letter is made up almost entirely of them. The cyma, as you know, is such a stroke as No. 5 in A, No. 4 in D, No. 1 in E, No. 1 in H, I, J, K, L, M, N, P, R, S and Z, and No. 2 in T; the half cymas is such a stroke as 3 in A, 5 in B, 3 in F, 4 in G, 3 in C, and so on. Every stroke is made with a flat stroke of the brush, except such strokes as 1 in A, 2 in B, 6 in B, 2 in F, 3 in G, etc. They are made with the edge of the brush, terminating in most cases with a half cyma, as in C. This is one of the simplest alphabets there is to make, though it looks difficult.

A little practice in keeping the brush always rubbed out flat, giving the stroke of the letter the full width of the brush, and ending with a sharp, clear cut point, will soon show itself in pen work.

For further information re brushes, outfits, etc., write to the editor of this paper, 143 University Ave., Toronto.

Niagara fruit growers are willing to put up $25,000 towards a fruit-cooling station at Winona, but want the Ontario and Dominion Governments to put up a similar sum. The station would chill the fruit on the cars by dry air, and remove the necessity of ice.

Amherstburg merchants have introduced a central auto delivery service on trial, and, if satisfactory, it will probably be continued permanently. For some time past the merchants have been trying to get together and evolve a proposition which will do away with excessive expense for maintenance of horses and waggons, as well as soliciting of orders. At a recent meeting a majority of the grocers decided that an auto service giving two regular deliveries every day would be an improvement on the present service. The trial of the auto delivery is a result.

Nicholson & Bain, Winnipeg, wholesale commission merchants and brokers, have let a contract in Calgary for the erection of a six storey solid brick warehouse and office building. It is also the intention of this firm to erect a large warehouse in Edmonton this year.

Something Special for Valentine Day

February 14th the Date—Heart Shaped Display and Price Cards Suggested— A Good Time to Feature Confectionery.

Not only every holiday, but every special occasion should be taken full advantage of by the grocer to boom sales.

Valentine Day, February 14, can be turned into a profitable time by the progressive grocer. It extends an opportunity to work up something special in the way of sales and window and interior displays.

"Valentine Day Sale," "Valentine Day at Our Store," or some other similar heading will serve to attract attention to any advertising which the dealer may use. The windows and counters can be trimmed appropriately for the occasion, and considerable interest aroused among customers.

It is the day on which people are supposed to show some affection for others. Show your affection for your customers by offering them something special. An explanation of the origin of the day in your advertising might be made of advantage.

In your window display, hearts should form a leading feature in keeping with the occasion. A big heart made of cardboard and covered with colored tissue paper might be placed prominently in the window. It could also be otherwise decorated to make it attractive.

Some specials might be featured. Confectionery would be an excellent line to feature. "Candy for your Valentine" is suggested as a show card.

Price tickets in the window and about the store should be numerous on this day, and in keeping with the general idea that they be heart shaped.

That the featuring of these special days are of great value in sales making, all those who have carried them out agree. The dealer would do well to begin planning early. Do something that will create interest and incidentally more business.

Montreal, Feb. 8.—The trade for the past week has been generally conceded a good one, and wholesalers are feeling in pretty good trim. The sugar market, as expected, has remained steady, the tendency of the trade in general being to await developments.

With many of the jobbers taking stock, there is more disposition to sell than to buy.

California seeded raisins are dull, the coast market, however, being firm.

SUGAR.—Business in sugar market is brisk for this season of the year. Stocks are low, and prices are still high, although decreases have lately taken place. It is expected that the spring trade will be active. Purchasing is being done with caution until the situation becomes more clearly defined.

No change in the molasses situation is reported, but demand is fairly good.

RICE AND TAPIOCA.—Rice is generally firm, with noted strength in Carolina this week. One firm, which has previously been quoting this line at 8½ cents have advanced it to 10 cents. Advances at producing centres has made this necessary. Trade is fair considering the rather high prices ruling.

VERMICELLI.—An advance of ½-cent per pound is noted in Canadian vermicelli. The demand for this line is showing a steady increase in Canada.

Canned Goods.

Toronto.—The movement of canned goods is steady but not brisk. Retailers in general bought heavily last fall and have not found it necessary to replenish their stocks except on odd lines as yet. One jobber points out that the real big season of demand is just now opening and he does not look for any big demand for another month or so. The tendency in general is one of steadiness.

An advance in condensed and evaporated milk was made by a number of firms a few weeks ago. Some other manufacturers have advanced prices 15 to 20 cents per case. There is a big demand for these lines and manufacturers are finding difficulty in caring for the large volume of business now being received.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—Still in the balance.

Pot Barley.—Now quoted at $3.65 cwt.

Canned milk.—Additional firms raise price.

Carolina Rice.—Higher in primary.

Barbados Sugar.—Opening prices high.

TORONTO, Feb. 8.—For season of the year, trade is running along quite satisfactorily. It cannot be described as brisk but this is not looked for at this time. Demand is well distributed over general lines, with the nature of the weather bringing certain lines in for special demand. Collections are reported fair.

The sugar situation is about the same as a week ago. The Brussel's convention on whose decision the market hinges failed to come to terms at first meeting and an adjournment was made until Wednesday of this week.

An opening price on new crop Barbados sugar received is $1.10 per cwt. higher than the opening price of last year.

SUGAR.—Sugar market as reported last week is in the balance. Nothing definite has as yet been received from the Brussels convention now in conference. On their decision regarding Russia's export of sugar hinges the market. One other factor in the situation is that the Cuban crop continues to turn out rather poorly as compared with other years.

Jobbers and retailers are purchasing on a hand to mouth basis awaiting the outcome of the Brussel's convention.

DRIED FRUITS.—A normal movement of dried fruits is reported by local jobbers. Hallowee dates in full boxes are now quoted at 5¾ cents. Stocks are not large. They would have been much larger but shipments received in England were of such poor quality that they were not sent on. The market under a fair consuming demand can therefore be expected to rule steady to firm.

Primary market on currants holds up well. Evaporated apples have lost none of their steadiness. Holders are making no concessions.

SPICES.—Trade was dull durng the first part of January, but has been quite brisk of late. Spices are in general much stiffer than a year ago, especially in peppers, ginger and cream tartar. The latter, while it is somewhat below the high point of the year, is nevertheless high. Peppers are again firm, late cables from primary points showing considerable strength.

RICE AND TAPIOCA.—Prices on new crop Rangoon rice are high. When adverse reports concerning the crop first came forward, the market rushed upward but again reached to a lower level at which a considerable amount was booked locally. From the low point the primary market has advanced 30 to 35 cents per cwt. New crop will not arrive until late in March. Patna and indeed all rice has a tendency to firmness.

Values in the producing sections of the United States are strengthening. Carolina rice is higher by ½ to ¾ cents at primary points. $

Tapioca is steady with a normal demand.

WINNIPEG, Feb. 8.—Trade during week has taken a decided turn for the better, and as a result wholesale houses report considerable activity. The milder weather which has been prevailing has aided considerably, and as a result orders have been received in considerable quantities. Travelers are again on the road, and are able to once more make their regular trips. So far, February storms have not made their appearance, and it is hoped these will be mild this year. Congestion of cars has been considerably relieved, but situation still remains precarious with moval of grain. Interior elevators are full, and farmers are unable to sell their grain at local points.

In various lines of trade, market may be said to be active, and there is nothing new in way of prices. Stocks held in city are of fair size, and there is little likelihood of a shortage in any lines, except dried fruits and one or two lines of canned goods before the summer is well advanced. General tone, therefore, may be said to be healthy, and as volume transacted, in spite of severe cold, is in a slight advance of last year, all are optimistic.

SUGAR.—There is no change in this line this week. Many large orders were received after the last decline. Market remains fairly steady, and although bulls and bears can be found in large numbers, the situation is undecided.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Feb. 6.—The feature of interest on local market during the last week has been the steadiness in flour, both Manitoba and Ontario being reported as firm, with an increase of 15 cents per barrel in Ontario patents. As yet there has been no response in Manitoba patents, but since the market is exceptionally strong an advance is not unlikely in these grades as well, May wheat being steadily on the upward trend. Although middlings are not so plentiful, no change has taken place in the price of feed. Oatmeal has gone up 15 cents a barrel, due largely to the increasing strength of oat market and difficulty experienced by millers in securing good milling oats. Package oats have been advanced from $3.90 to $4.00 per case in all brands.

Local grocers are preparing for a run on seed and with approach of spring interest is increasing, but price is doing the same. Timothy and clover have both advanced, timothy having gone up about 50 cents per hundred. Wholesalers are also advising that it is none too early to place orders for maple sugar and maple syrup, and in many cases their advice is being followed with orders in these lines which will soon be selling.

The country market is fairly well supplied at present with vegetables, meats, poultry, and dairy products. Much speculation is being advanced, as was reported in The Grocer last week, concerning the potato market. During last week $2.50 was demanded, and ready sales were made at this price. There are many farmers, it has been learned, through the country, who have yet fairly good quantities on hand, but local merchants are in hopes of having this stock transferred to them before long. Markets in Upper Canada is reported as being encouraging to the local trade, though large shipments are not taking place. Many dealers are holding back the major portion of their stock of potatoes with expectation of cleaning up a neat profit, for they feel certain of their reaching the $3.00 mark. Eggs remain about the same, selling from 35 to 40 cents for hennery stock, and from 28 to 35 for case. Butter is firmer and ranges from 21 to 35, according to quality. There is said to be a fairly good stock of butter throughout the country, but in many cases the farmers are not coming to the city as frequently as would be desired to lower the price in this commodity.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

Halifax, Feb. 6.—The wholesale grocery business is fairly good for season of the year. While orders coming to hand are not large, they are fully up to the average of winter months last year. There is a fairly heavy movement in provisions, which are going to supply the lumber camps, operations being now in full swing.

Sugar prices are fairly firm. Standard granulated is $5.60, United Empire $5.40, bright yellow $5.40, No. 1 yellow $5.10, and unbranded $4.95.

Flour prices are firmer. Manitoba high patents are $6.45 to $6.50, Ontario, 90 per cent., $5.00 to $5.25, and Ontario blends $5.25 to $5.50. Rolled oats are $5.60 to $5.70 per barrel, and in bags $2.60 to $2.65. Corn meal is $1.80 to $1.90. Beans are firm at $2.60 for hand picked, and $2.45 for prime.

Receipts of eggs show some improvement, but demand is light. Fresh laid stock is quoted at 31 cents. Case eggs are in fair supply, but few grocers are now handling them. Good butter is scarce in the local market, especially in tubs. The quality of creamery stock is first class, but dairy butter is not up to the average. Creamery is 31c., and dairy from 26 to 27 cents.

Potato market continues the centre of attraction. Some dealers who have good stocks on hand had tempting offers, which would net them handsome profits over the initial cost, but they prefer to hold on to them, as the outlook favors still higher prices.

SUGAR ADVANCES.

Just previous to going to press, refined sugar advanced 10 cents per cwt. It will be remembered that prices declined 10 cents a little over a week ago in sympathy with lower prices in U. S., brought about by price-cutting. This is probably the reaction under the steady raw market. Outcome of Brussels Convention is now awaited. Quotations on sugar should read 10 cents per cwt. higher.

NATIONAL CANNERS IN SESSION THIS WEEK.

B. T. Huston, editor of The Canadian Grocer, is in Rochester, N. Y., this week, attending the annual meeting of the National Canners' Association, Machinery and Supplies Association and Dried Fruit and Canned Goods Brokers' Association, which is being held in that city from Feb. 5 to 9. A report of the convention with those subjects of interest to the Canadian trade will be given in next week's issue of The Grocer.

WINNIPEG MERCHANTS WANT TAX REFORM.

Whirlwind Campaign for New Members —Will Fight Present Business Tax.

Winnipeg, Feb. 8—(Special wire to The Grocer)—Winnipeg Retail Merchants have instituted a whirlwind campaign for new members, the purpose in view being to fight present business tax based on rental value. In their opinion, single tax is the more equitable method of taxation and this they will put forth every effort to secure.

They recognize that it is only through strong organization that this or any other needed reform will be secured, and their first effort will be to build up a good strong membership in their association. They have now only two hundred members, but have set 3,500 as the number they hope to secure within a few days.

This forward step by the Winnipeg Retail Merchants is felt to be the beginning of a great tax reform. John Dyke, grocer, is president of the local association, which aims at a record increase in membership in a short time.

PURE FOOD ACT TO BE ENFORCED.

Good Law Already on Statute Books.

Ottawa, Feb.7.—The government has been for some time considering the question of the Pure Food Act. It was felt that Canada has been lagging far behind other countries—and particularly the United States, in protecting the consumer from fraudulent foods.

Hon. B. Nantel, minister of inland revenue, at first had under consideration bringing in an entirely new act. Investigation has shown, however, that there is a fairly good act now on the statute books. The trouble has been that the government has made practically no attempt to enforce it.

Mr. Nantel has given orders strictly to enforce the present act, and only a few amendments will be made to it this session. If this does not prove satisfactory, the act next year will be repealed and a new bill will be introduced.

Celery and Navel Oranges Firmer

Shipments of Celery Continue Small Due to Backward Season in California—Increase in Offerings Expected Later In Month—Navel Oranges Are Higher—Damage by Frost Has Strengthening Tendency While Shippers Are Holding Back Fearing Damage in Transit by Frost—Potatoes Hold at High Price—Grapefruit is Strong.

California navel oranges are firmer and higher, especially for high quality fruit. The frost which damanged the citrus crop in California is no doubt responsible in part for the stronger tendency. The amount of damage, while varying in different sections, is conceded on the whole to be considerable, and the early estimates of the crop will have to be reduced. Shippers are also loath to send forth fruit when there is danger of it being caught by frost in transit, as has occurred to many cars during the recent cold weather.

Florida oranges are in good demand and tone of market is one of steadiness. Marmalade oranges have been taken up well. Decks have been well cleared of this line at some centres and additional shipments are awaited. Grapefruit is holding up strongly under small stocks, while lemons are finding a good demand and are steady to firm.

Celery is scarce and consequently firm and higher. The season in California has been backward and to date shipments have been small. However, weather of late has been more favorable and around the middle of the month, offerings should be larger, increasing during the month. Liberal movements of Florida celery are not expected to commence until around March 1.

The soaring tendency in potatoes has as yet received no check and values continue to move upward at many centres. Holders in New Bruswick continue firm in their ideas. However, the market since it started on its upward trend has made marked advances and with probability of imports of European potatoes, the market should become less excited than has been the case during the past month, unless as pointed out before, the United States lifts the duty on this line which would work for greater strength.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—This market does not offer a great deal of interest at present, nor will there be much change until the middle of next month. Business is brisk for this time of the year and the supply is sufficient to meet the normal demand.

Florida grapefruit is exceedingly high and tends to advance.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS.—California navel oranges are higher in price. The damage by frost in that state which is conceded as considerable, no doubt has had a marked strengthening tendency. Then, again, shippers have been holding back, for as frost of late has caught many cars in transit, they are loath to risk shipments. Florida oranges have been taken up well.

The first arrivals of marmalade oranges met with a good demand. The market was well cleared up at the beginning of the week, but shipments are expected shortly.

Grapefruit, noted as strong for some time, is higher at $5.50 to $6.00 per case. Cranberries are quoted easier at $13.75 per barrel. Stocks are well to an end.

VEGETABLES.—Strength and higher prices are apparent in several lines this week. Potatoes have lost none of their steadiness and prices are slightly higher again with New Brunswick stock quoted at $1.85. Prices at points throughout Ontario indicate the smallness of stocks in this province, while ideas of holders in New Brunswick are high. Imports of European supplies might offer some check to the soaring market.

Carrots and beets, which it has been pointed out were in stinted supply, are higher in price, while cabbage is firmer at $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel. Firmness is present in sweet potatoes as well as mushrooms and hot house tomatoes. California celery maintains its high position with $8.00 per case being quoted.

Retailers Want Their January Discounts

Claim Wholesalers Did Not Give Them Sufficient Notice of the Change in Policy—Letter Sent Out by Wholesalers' Section, Board of Trade, Arrived Late They Say and Some Did Not Receive It.

Toronto, Feb. 8.—(Special)—All apparently has not been sunshine in regard to the abolition of discounts by wholesale grocers which went into effect on Jan. 2, 1912. This was an agreement signed by 42 wholesale grocers in Ontario, in which they agreed on the discontinuance of discounts on all articles excepting tea, sugar and vinegar. This agreement also stipulated that interest at 7 per cent. per annum should be charged on all accounts not paid within 30 days, and that manufacturers' fixed prices and terms on proprietary articles should be strictly observed.

Many retail grocers in this city, when they received their accounts at the end of the month were not wont to pay them unless the discounts previously given were allowed. Many of them claim they received no notification of the discounts being abolished, and bought their goods during the month without knowing of any change in terms.

Not Generally Known.

It appears that no general or individual announcement was made by the wholesale grocers until about the 26th of the month when the wholesale grocers' section of the Toronto Board of Trade sent out a copy of the agreement with an explanation of the reasons for its adoption.

Some retail grocers even state they did not receive this announcement, although every effort was made by the Board of Trade to reach every retail grocer in the city. It seems also that a number of the travelers went on selling goods during the month without mentioning the abolition of discounts that have been given in the past. The grocers claim they should have notified them before selling the goods.

It was on this plea of non-notification of any change in terms that many grocers refused to pay their accounts without the usual discount.

Reasons Given for Change.

The following is the explanation of the reasons for adopting the new plan as sent out by the wholesale grocers' section of the Board of Trade:

"It is well known that profits in the wholesale grocery trade have for years been approaching the vanishing point, when compared with the cost of doing business, and it was recognized that something must be done to meet the changed conditions under modern methods of competition.

"The manufacturer also recognized that the prices of his proprietary articles were being cut, and that the wholesale trade were ceasing to take an interest in the sale of the goods because the profits did not pay the cost of doing the business. After conference with the trade, many of the principal manufacturers put in force the "Contract Selling Plan," requiring goods to be sold at stipulated terms and prices.

Cash Discounts Unreasonable.

"This plan was found to work well until some houses began to give rebates by allowing unreasonable cash discounts off the monthly statements, which, it was claimed, were given on goods that were not proprietary articles. In order to stop this evasion of these agreements the trade unanimously decided to adopt the net system, abolishing all discounts on all goods and selling only at net 30 days, as set forth in the accompanying agreement.

"In discussing the subject with representatives of the retail trade, it was found that many cordially endorse this action. The average retailer is chiefly concerned in knowing that his competitors are not doing better in prices nor getting better terms than he is. What he wants is fair treatment, which means fair prices, fair terms and fair competition. He is then able to charge his customers fair and reasonable prices. No merchant, wholesale or retail, wishes to take secret rebates which will render him liable to criminal prosecution. It is therefore the unanimous opinion that these terms are in the interests of all branches of the business."

The agreement referred to in above has been previously published in The Grocer.

Beaton's grocery, Oshawa, Ont., are operating a unique contest. They are advertising in the local paper using talks on various grocery items and point out for instance that the first and last words of the ad. are the first and last words of a certain proverb. The contestant who sends in the first 12 correct proverb answers gets as a prize a 42 piece China tea set.

Marked Strength in Rolled Oat Market

Market Firm at Last Week's Advance—Raw Market is Strong—Good Demand for all Kinds of Cereals—Winter Wheat Flours Generally 20 Cents per Barrel Higher—Small Receipts of Winter Wheat—Some Millers Note Firmness in Manitoba Flour—Domestic Trade Fair for Season—Export Enquiry Quiet.

Rolled oats are firm at last week's advance in sympathy with continued strong tendency in market for raw material. It will be remembered that prices declined 30 cents per bag during December and so far the reaction has only been 10 cents per bag. The market for oats is strong when compared with that ruling previous to the declines in December, indicating that firmness can be expected to rule.

Those retailers who are pushing cereals at the present time report an excellent demand, the weather for some time having been quite favorable in this regard. Millers are also well pleased with the volume of business being transacted.

As noted last week, receipts of winter wheat have been on a small scale for some time with prices on the ascend. In consequence, winter wheat flours have been firming and there has been a general advance of around 10 cents per bag in these grades.

Manitoba flours have not changed in price but there is somewhat of a firmer tendency, and there are certain sections of the trade who favor higher prices. The higher values for winter wheat flour no doubt have a strengthening tendency, throwing greater weight upon Manitobas.

The domestic trade in flour is considered as fair for the season as no special briskness is looked for at this time. Export enquiry has been rather quiet of late. Competition between mills is quite keen for as it has been pointed out before the milling capacity in Canada is very large.

Considerable quantities of wheat and oats are being worked for export.

The strength in the rolled oats market is generally conceded. It is so marked that some firms already announce an advance to take place in near future. One firm say they will put up prices 10 cents per bag on Feb. 10, while another firm announce a similar advance to take place on Feb. 12. Cornmeal is also firmer and higher.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Flour market is devoid of special features. Demand is active and prices for present remain unchanged. Firmness is probable, owing to a large call which is soon to be expected. Although quiet just now, market promises interesting results shortly.

CEREALS.—Market for rolled oats increased 10 cents per bag last week, but since then has showed no further movement. Stocks are small and if the demand, which is heavy at present, increases, the supply will hardly be sufficient to meet it. It is the opinion of some, that another advance can be expected before long.

TORONTO.

FLOUR.—There has been no change in prices of Manitoba flours, although some millers note firmness and favor higher prices. There are others who say they see no reason for any immediate advance in values. "Prices on Manitoba wheat at bay ports has reached the record for the season, it is true," said one dealer, "but on the other hand values in Winnipeg remain unchanged. Wheat can be brought from Winnipeg, all rail cheaper at the present time than it can be purchased at bay ports for. However, wheat can not be brought very quickly from the west." There seems to be a fairly good demand for the season with the market steady to firm.

Ontario wheat continues to come forward tardily and prices are high with a consequent firm feeling in winter wheat flour.

CEREALS.—Firmness prevails in rolled oats market in sympathy with a similar feeling in the raw material. The tendency is to strength, one large mill announcing that they will advance prices 10 cents per bag on Feb. 10. Cornmeal maintains the position outlined before.

Retailers who are giving the necessary attention to cereals are finding a good demand. Millers report heavy sales.

Biscuits and Confectionery Profitable

Some Phases of the Attention That Should be Given to This Department—The Dealer's Knowledge of His Lines and His Ability to Suggest and Decide for Customers Means Much—Hints on Display—How a Confectionery Department was Begun.

By O. S. Johnston.

Are you paying as much attention to your biscuit and confectionery trade as you should? The answer to this question will best be given by looking over your stocks and seeing if they are in a satisfactory way, not only from a quantity point of view but also from a condition standpoint.

That the retail grocer can make money and good money too, from the proper handling of sweetmeats and good class biscuits there can be no reasonable doubt. He has the lead, so to speak, on the exclusive confectioner because the housewife, in nine cases out of ten, visits the grocery store for her staples, etc., before she thinks of confectionery. Doesn't it stand to sense therefore that an attractive display of confectionery either in show cases or in pails which are coming more into vogue as containers will catch her eye? The retailer's selling power should then come into action. The desire to purchase has been slightly developed by the silent salesman and right here is the true value of a good display—the power to stimulate buying desire.

Up to the Retailer.

To-day one hears a lot of talk about goods selling themselves but the retailer knows all too well that he has never or never will see any commodity walk off his counter or fly off his shelves, in spite of the propensities jocularly attributed to cheese in this respect. No, the retailer is a salesman and should strive to put himself in a similar position to the traveler who calls and sells him the goods; in other words, he should regard himself as a representative of the firm whose goods he handles and put up politely and plausibly the best reasons why the housewife should have the goods.

This done, the sale made, the retailer has sent the goods in question on their last journey, to the consumer's home, and has completed his part in their distribution.

Care With Biscuits.

Every day dealers are becoming more and more awake to the fact that while it is essential to the proper management of their business that they keep a good stock of every line which has merit and comes under the heading of quality, yet many of them make a mistake in carrying their whole stock of biscuits on the shelves.

This may seem a rather contradictory statement, but no matter how well the goods are displayed the very number of the tins and the variety of design is going to confuse the customer, and she will not make as good a selection as under other conditions. In order to overcome this difficulty and play the game in the interest of the manufacturer, in other words to place the necessary weight on retail co-operation, a sample tin of each class of biscuit should only be kept in a prominent position in the store and all should be so carefully arranged that the housewife can easily and quickly make a selection, aided of course by suggestions from the clerk, which should at all times flavor of salesmanship.

Furthermore, the balance of stock can be stored in a satisfactory place and be safeguarded from loss through dampness, etc. Thus the dealer can see right here an antidote for slow biscuit sales—simply have samples on display, facilitate the making of a selection by the consumer and know that that selection is satisfactory in every respect. This will save time, for time means money, and will result in more frequent and better purchases.

Confectionery Profits.

There is one thing certain that no retailer can ever derive all the big profits to be had from confectionery sales if he does not forget the "other fellow," namely, the exclusive confectioner, and persuade himself that he is the only man in the town dealing in this particular line. Such indifference to his competitor, partial indifference, let us say, because some attention must be paid to what is going on in the other store in order to keep abreast of competition, will act as an incentive to the dealer to work up a confectionery business paying handsome profits.

Easy to Handle.

If proper care is taken in the placing of confectionery in the store, there should be no trouble or discouragement through loss as with some other lines which are carried more widely.

Sweetmeats always look well when properly displayed and it should be remembered that the youngsters are a good means of advertising the fact that special attention is being paid to confections as they will ask the mothers for pennies "to get some candy at—'s." This constant begging, if such we may call it—for you know how much the mother is pestered from time to time by her youngsters for pennies and nickels—must impress upon her mind that her grocer is becoming a confectionery man. And this is exceptionally cheap advertising.

Actual Success.

A Montreal dealer stated recently that he thought candy was a useless and troublesome line to carry until he was persuaded by a traveling salesman to put in at least a stock of penny goods. He did so. The youngsters came down to the store and he gave the majority of them a few, knowing that they would tell their mothers, and he was not far wrong in his belief. They did so and before long he noticed in a few Saturday orders a request for twenty cents or a quarter's worth of candies. This department grew larger and larger, till now it is most profitable, and what is still more gratifying there is a good demand for high class chocolates.

He Was a Salesman.

But we might mention that this dealer was a salesman. He did not stand like a dummy behind the counter and let the customer decide whether she would take candy or not. He was wise enough to realize that during her study of the sweets displayed, she would probably be at the "almost persuaded" stage. By an opportune use of selling talk he frequently helped her to decide the way he wanted. You must agree then, Mr. Retailer, that it is well worth your while helping your customers out of doubt, because every time you do so, you put a few extra cents into your cash box!

What do these cents mean at the end of the year?

Broken Biscuits.

Customers should not be troubled with broken biscuits and it seems that a number of grocers pay but little attention to crackers in particular. That there is little excuse for these being broken is evidenced by the fact that the manufacturer of some of the leading lines on sales to-day, recently produced a package of sodas at the factory. We have no proof that he is a past student of the magic art but he made that package waltz (or perhaps it was the Highland Fling) on the table and opening it not one of the sodas was smashed. Why then should the consumer have to put up with trouble when a little care on the part of the driver or clerk would cure the trouble?

A request for a charter has been petitioned to the Quebec Legislature by the retail clerks of Montreal, who are the prime movers of the Association of Retail Clerks.

Dealers Preparing for Lenten Trade

Retailers are Ordering Freely in Anticipation of Lenten Demand—Wholesalers Report Marked Briskness — Conditions Favorable for Sale of Fish—Can be Handled with Minimum Expense and Trouble—High Prices on Other Foods Bring Fish Into Favor—Receipts of Fish on East Coast Continue on Small Scale.

The movement of fish at present time is extremely brisk. Not only have retailers to care for the present demand, which under the favorable conditions, is large, but they are also ordering freely in anticipation of a good Lenten demand. The opening of this season of special briskness in fish is not far distant, and retail dealers will find it to their advantage to give early attention to their stocks.

The outlook could hardly be brighter than it is just now. The weather is all to be desired, and fish can be handled with minimum expense and trouble. Lent, with its many special fish days, will shortly work for a big demand, while high prices on other food commodities will bring fish foods into favor.

Nova Scotia continues to report light receipts of fresh fish, which added to the stinted arivals during January will probably work for a firmer tendency in frozen and smoked lines as the season advances.

Lobsters are scarce and high in price. Smelts have been a little more plentiful of late.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—Demand for fish in anticipation of Lent has started, and all varieties are moving well. Supplies are sufficient to meet the call in all lines, except Labrador herrings and green and salt cod, which are very scarce, the latter being almost entirely off the market. Prices have not changed to any extent, but if the demand increases much more, in all probabilities a firming up will take place.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—The last week has been an average one with local fish dealers. Fair weather tempted many fishermen, and was responsible for better results than during a few weeks previous. The first arrivals of gaspereaux were placed on the market, and brought 7 cents each. Although this is high in price, it is only reasonable for the earliest arrivals. Western halibut is being received in quite good quantities, selling at 15 cents, and the demand in this line keeps up well. From the North Shore there were many receipts of smelts during last week, and the Kennebecasis River contributed as well, so that market in this commodity was well stocked. They brought 12 cents per pound. Lobsters have not been known to be so scarce for some time. Many fishermen have abandoned the idea of fishing lobsters for a time, until the stormy season has passed, or abated. For those who have brought them to market the returns have been good, as they are well up in price. Haddock, cod and herring stocks continue about the same.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—A good, brisk trade is being done in fish at the present time. Demand is well distributed over general lines. A big trade is being transacted in frozen lines, while smoked, pickled and prepared varieties are moving well.

Anticipation of the Lenten season is probably partly responsible for the present brisk movement. With the opening of this big period of demand not far distant, retailers feel that it is time that they were looking to their stocks.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—Receipts of fresh fish here this week have been light. Only one vessel arrived, with 8,000 pounds of cod and haddock, principally the latter. There is only a fair demand for fresh fish at present. The market is bare of halibut. None of local bankers have landed any fresh halibut here for several weeks, and storage stocks have all been used up. Smelts are in better supply, but the local demand has fallen off. Large quantities of these fish, however, have been exported to the United States market.

Lobster situation shows little improvement, and the price continues high. Local receipts continue light. No large lobsters are on the market. Shipments to Boston market are away below the average. There is a demand in the American market for all the lobsters that local dealers can supply. Large lobsters in Boston are selling at record prices.

Grocery dealers in various parts of the province are now stocking up with dry fish in preparation for the Lenten season, which is near at hand. Codfish leads the demand, and pickled herring come next. There is practically no salt mackerel on hand here. Smoked haddies, kippered herring, bloaters and smoked salmon are all in good demand. Stocks of haddies are now quite heavy, and orders continue good. Boneless fish in boxes is also selling freely. The oyster business continues good, with fair quality stock offering. Foreign markets for dry fish show some improvement. Prices are firm and no important changes are noted.

Boosting Fish Department Prior to Lent

Fish Should be Handled in Cleanly Manner—Some Methods Used by Dealers — Suggestions for Incerasing Sales — Fish Counter Running Parallel to Show Window Used—Study Customers' Wants.

From now until the close of Lent is the best period for the sale of fish.

Lent is just about four weeks distant being ushered in this year on Feb. 21 and continuing until April 7. A good long season is therefore before the dealer and preparations should now be well under way if he expects to secure his share of the trade.

Proper Handling Necessary.

The dealer is or at least should be acquainted with the reasons why fish is a good line to handle. Perhaps the main reasons will bear repetition. In the first place, handled properly, so that there will be no unnecessary loss they give a good profit. Then again with the winter temperature they are easily handled.

Another feature and one which should not be forgotten is the fact that handling fish attracts customers to the store where proper salesmanship should be used to induce them to purchase other goods.

There is a big advantage in getting this department into shape while the season is yet young. In addition to the extra profit thus secured, the merchant gets the people coming his way, which will work for a much heavier volume of trade when the Lenten season arrives.

Stock Good Sellers.

A substantial and profitable trade in fish is not secured by the dealer by merely putting in a stock. Care must be taken in the selection of varieties, for the customer does not want merely "fish." He wants particular varieties and the dealer must aim to secure these. People's choice of fish will change from week to week and this must be allowed for. A good selling line to-day may probably be a poor seller a week or so hence. It is best perhaps for the dealer to buy cautiously at first. Get sufficient of different varieties to supply requirements but it is preferable to buy in smaller quantities and more often. Thus stock is kept fresh without heavy buying.

Fish Counter and Show Window.

Display is an important lever in selling fish with cleanliness an essential feature. If one can arrange for a separate department so much the better. One dealer has a fish counter at the front of his store running parallel to a section of his window front. Needless to say he has developed an appreciable fish trade.

The public is becoming more and more particular about the manner in which food is handled in the store. They now demand the observance of the most sanitary methods.

So it is with fish. Display them in a manner that will appeal rather than repel them.

White porcelain platters are much in use now by fish men as they present a cleanly appearance and show the fish to best advantage. Some dealers have their fish window or counter top covered with marble the same as used in meat departments. These can easily be kept clean in appearance. These tops often have a raised rim so as to hold in any water which may result from melted ice.

Use the Newspaper.

Attention of customers to fish department should be attracted by advertising. Tell them that you are giving special attention to this line, and that cleanliness is strictly observed. By a listing of fish with prices, business may often be directly secured.

FIG PACKING FIRMS UNITE.

An amalgamation of some 24 fig packing firms has been brought about and a company will shortly be registered in London, under the Companies Consolidated Act, to absorb these businesses. The new concern, which will be styled the Smyrna Fig Co., will have a capital of $1,000,000, the working capital to be issued having been already fully subscribed in Smyrna. The company is taking over nearly 80 per cent. of the fig packing interest.

THE CANNING INDUSTRY.

A string of tin that would reach all the way from Halifax to Vancouver and back again to Calgary, or about 75,000,000 cans, is yearly required to meet the demands of canning factories in Canada, says a leading authority.

Fruits and vegetables perhaps form the main feature of the Canadian canning industry. In British Columbia, salmon canning is the big industry, over 60 factories being operated.

SADD MADE THEM GLAD.

Toronto, Feb. 1.—'Twas "Sadd" for White & Co. and "sad" for Davidson & Hay. In explanation it might be said that Sadd was the man who scored the majority of the goals for White & Co. when they again defeated the Davidson & Hay aggregation by a 4-2 score at Excelsior rink on Saturday last. The gladiators who took part in the fray were as follows:—

White & Co.: Goal—Ed. Jordan; point, L. Reiley; cover, E. Surtiss; rover, V. Bent; centre, M. Cuthbert; right, R. Langskill; Left, J. Sadd.

Need Mild Weather for Relief in Eggs

Continued Cold Weather Since Early January has Interfered With Increase in New Laids That was Expected—Storage Stocks are Well to an End—Only Warm Weather Will Relieve Present Acute Situation—Butter Stocks are Small and Market Continues Strong—Little Relief in Sight for a Month—Some New Zealand Butter is Said to be Coming Along.

A break in the continued cold weather which has been ruling since first of the year would indeed be welcomed, not alone because the coal bin needs a let-up but also because it is apparently the only thing which will afford relief to present acute situation in eggs. The weather man is responsible in part at least for present record prices for this line.

It was pointed out early last fall that stocks of storage eggs were comparatively small and that a strong market could be expected on this line during the winter. It was hardly expected, however, that values would ascend to the present height, because an early increase in supply of new laids was looked for. True, production did materially increase towards latter part of December, and new laids declined considerably from the high level held previous to Christmas. Here the weather man interfered. Extremely cold weather set in not only throughout Canada but very far south in the United States and expected goodly increase in new laids failed to materialize.

The amount of new laids coming forward is small. Storage stocks are well to an end and at record prices. Values are just as high across the border, so that apparently relief will come only with milder weather. A rise in the temperature would increase production both in the United States and Canada and afford some relief.

While cold weather is responsible for high level of eggs, hot weather is cause of the high prices for butter and cheese. This hot weather was that which ruled last summer, not alone in Canada but pretty well throughout the world. The production of butter and cheese both in America and abroad was materially cut down and the winter was started with extremely small stocks on both these lines.

Stocks of butter are short and prices high with nothing apparent in the immediate future to break the market. Some New Zealand stock is said to be coming along but little relief will be found until the flow of milk begins to increase, which should be early this year, possibly in another month. Meanwhile, consumption of butter is much smaller than is usual, for with high prices such as are ruling now, it is only natural that the housewife attempt to economize on this line.

A return of cheese to a normal price level is a quite distant event. Nothing but strength now rules, with stocks small and firm markets abroad.

One firm is already pushing smoked hams and bacon for Easter trade. "We do not think you will see lower prices," they say, "and there is a chance of seeing them higher, so that nothing is lost by placing orders now."

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—This market has made no noticeable change within the week. The same prices prevail with demand not brisk. The market shows many features of steadiness. Hogs are steady.

BUTTER.—Butter has remained steady throughout the week. Stocks are small and on account of high quotations, an attempt is made by the consumer to economize on this line. This has slackened the demand considerably.

EGGS.—What will become of the egg market? This is an interesting question just now and can only be answered by the weather clerk. Storage are almost entirely bare of stocks and the eggs on hand will not last a week. New laids which were expected to steady the market cannot be had until the cold weather ceases. It is impossible to say how high prices will go. Within the last week, selects have advanced from 37 to 40 cents and No. 1 from 33 to 38 cents.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS.—Live hogs are steady to 10 cents higher this week, $6.25 being quoted at country points.

The movement of pork products is not brisk but it is considered fair for the season. Lard is coming in for a good demand under the high price of butter. Long clear is quoted from 11 to 12 cents.

BUTTER.—Butter market has lost none of its strength. Creamery in prints and solids is quoted firmer and higher again this week, fresh creamery prints bringing 35 to 37 cents. Dealers see no relief to the present stiffness for at least a month when it is expected that an increased flow of milk will help the situation. At present stocks are small. Without doubt, the high price is curtailing consumption considerably.

EGGS.—Egg situation noted as acute last week, has as expected, developed further features of strength. Storage eggs have advanced another 2 cents, and at present price of 35 to 37 cents are at the record figure for recent years at least.

Relief will come only with advent of warmer weather. Stocks of storage are well to an end. New laids on account of continued cold weather are arriving tardily. However, if milder weather would set in, offerings from the Southern States would increase, while the production in Canada would also become larger.

United States markets are on a par with the situation here and latest advices show no possible chance of imports being made at present to relieve the high prices here.

Encyclopedia of Some Grocery Articles

Some High Class Lines With Which Dealers Should be Familiar —Description of Truffles, Anchovies, Pate de Foie Gras, Marrons and Shrimps.

TRUFFLES are an edible fungi and have been called underground mushrooms, and also vegetable tubers. They possess an animal rather than a vegetable flavor. They are found mostly in loose soil about a foot deep, under and near old oak, beech or walnut trees and are of irregular size, round shape, and dark brown color outside, while the insides may be brown, grey or white. In appearance, however, the ordinary truffle is about the size of a walnut with a rough brown surface closely akin to the potato. They are found in Italy, but more largely in France where they are preserved in large quantities. They are prepared in somewhat the same manner as tomatoes and other like vegetables. They are noted for their aromatic flavor but are seldom eaten alone, being used extensively for flavoring and seasoning choice dishes. They are an acknowledged stimulant to the digestive organs.

ANCHOVIES.—The anchovy is a small but delicious fish of the herring family and largely found in the Mediterranean sea. The fish are attracted to the boats at night by lighted torches, and are scooped up in nets. The anchovy has a pronounced flavor and is a splendid appetizer. It is packed in oil the same as sardines and is also spiced and packed in brine. "Have a piquant flavor most acceptable to a jaded appetite," is one reference to the anchovy.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS. — A vegetable of the cabbage variety; in fact each sprout looks like a very small head of cabbage. They are, however, very much smaller.

PATE DE FOIE GRAS.—A very delicately flavored paste composed of choice French goose livers and truffles. Good appetiser and very nourishing. Packed in tins and air tight stone jars.

MARRONS.—Large whole French chestnuts preserved in different flavored sauces. They are of rich flavor and specially delicious for desserts.

MACEDOME.—Mixed fresh French vegetables, comprising peas, turnips, lima and string beans cut up into small pieces and bottled.

SHRIMPS.—A fish sold in Canada in tins. It is a salt water fish about two inches in length. They inhabit most of the low sandy shores throughout Europe. There are two species, the brown and the red. The brown are the most plentiful, larger and more highly flavored.

NEW ELECTRIC SIGN DEVICE.

Toronto, Feb. 7.—A large number of the smaller dealers here are using a new advertising electric device which is attracting considerable attention. By means of it certain signs are thrown on the pavement in front of the store and can hardly fail to attract the attention of the passerby.

The construction of this new electric device is simple. It is hung sometimes above the door and sometimes within the window. It is of cylinder form and points to the pavement upon which the sign is to show. At the back of the cylinder is the light producer, a common electric bulb. In front of this is a sheet of tin with the words which the dealer wishes to appear stencilled out on it. In front of this is a magnifying glass which enlarges the sign and throws it on the sidewalk.

The sign can be changed whenever desired. All that is necessary is to place another tin plate with the stencilled words within the cylinder.

These signs are being used by dealers to advertise specials and when changed frequently do considerable advertising for the store.

COCOANUT A GOOD FOOD.

The United States agricultural department has demonstrated that cocoanut is a most healthful and nutritious food. Energy in the form of muscular power is amply supplied by it, the food is easily digested and is good for children.

Lucky Pod Dried Peas

For years we have been sole agents for this excellent brand of dried peas. There is no brand on the market equal to them for flavor and quality—and we have tested numerous samples in coming to this conclusion. They afford a very pleasant change in the winter vegetable list, especially when potatoes are scarce and high in price.

Grocers: It is not necessary nor advisable to handle too many different brands of the same class of goods. Quicker sales and larger profits are made by handling a few well-known brands of standard quality that your customers are familiar with, and which have the confidence of the manufacturer to the extent of a large advertising appropriation to assist you in increasing your sales.

Protect Your Customers

The housewife cannot do good baking with poor baking powder. The absolute purity and reliability of SHIELD BAKING POWDER give it first place in the baking cabinet of your women customers.

SHIELD is a quick seller, sells with least effort and profits best. It's pleasure to sell an article that you know will please.

The "safe and sure" method of selling saves time, expense and avoids dissatisfaction. The "uncertain" products bring doubt as to the reliability of the dealer and eventually the loss of the custom.

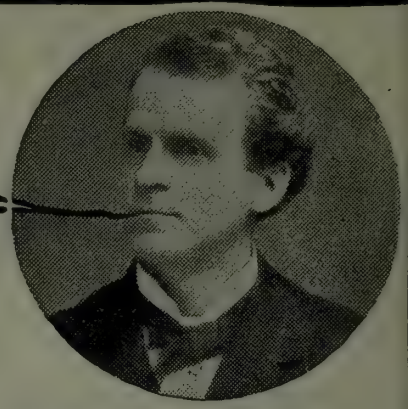
RETAIL GROCERS:—

There are Trade Marks whose worth runs into millions of dollars. They became valuable for reasons that under fire of cheap imitations and long years of mushroom competition, quality of goods they cover was maintained and value given. From the morass of Maple Syrup Brands that have so deluged the market recently, bringing disrepute on the industry and depressing consumption, the Maple Leaf Brand now stands out for the one Standard for Quality and Value the world over.

For years Price for Quarts varied from $4.70 to $4.80, and February, 1911, period for low Sugar, price dropped to $4.50; same quality and brand now brings $4.70. Dealers can, I think, without mistake, fight shy of Brands being offered to the trade at less than jobbers paid last fall, and give a wide berth to brands that were selling when sugar was low at $4.85 per case for Quarts, but are now being urged onto the market at $4.50 per case.



MR. SMALL speaks briefly on the Maple Syrup situation. Having been a close student of the business for the past 32 years, his remarks, particularly at this juncture, may be appreciated.

THE CATSUP WITH THE DIFFERENT FLAVOR

There is a delicacy of flavor and appetising richness to every bottle of "E.D.S." BRAND TOMATO CATSUP that has won for it a lot of friends among particular Canadians.

The difference lies in the fact that only the choicest ripe tomatoes are used in its preparation, and the goodness of the fruit is pressed out by a special process of our own. The fruit is not overcooked, all peelings are carefully excluded.

The Wide range of "E.D.S." Brand Jams and Jellies compare favorably with the best catsups in America or ony other country.

Better Be Safe Than Sorry

Quick reference.

Less than a year ago a young fellow walked into one of our offices and announced that he was about to engage in the grocery business and that he wanted to purchase some sales books. Our salesman requested permission to demonstrate the Keith Account System, the use of which would shorten his work of keeping customers' accounts, eliminating the possibility of mixing or losing charges and give him full protection against loss by fire. He replied that he could not afford to purchase such a system at the outset, as his capital was small and was needed to properly develop his business, although the benefit of the system was apparent. After explaining to him, however, how he could pay for the system with the money it would save him, he gave us his order and a Keith Account System was installed in his store.

One night several months later, his store was discovered on fire and before it could be extinguished his stock of goods was completely destroyed, and his customers' accounts in the Keith Account System were all that were saved. As his whole capital was invested in stock, it was only by saving his accounts that he was able to resume business. (Name and address on request.)

THE KEITH ACCOUNT SYSTEM

ONE WRITING : SELF INDEXING : FIRE PROOF

Do you, as this merchant did, feel that you can't afford to buy The Keith Account System? Would your accounts be saved if your store burned to-night? Ask yourself these questions, then obey that impulse to write us and tell you how the Keith Account System will pay for itself with the money it saves. You won't obligate yourself.

IN SELECTING your FRUIT and VEGETABLE Cans use the same careful judgment and criticism that you exercise in all other purchases. "American Cans" court such a test. Cans are not all alike, even if they do seem similar and look alike as "two peas in a pod." Satisfy every one of your needs in weight, strength, manufacturing detail and appearance; then consider price, promptness of delivery and possibility of a continuous supply without interruption. On the above basis we will take a chance on securing and holding your business.

Auto Delivery Curtails Delivery Expenses

Service is one of the main features which determines a merchant's patronage, with delivery the most important part. Merchants are more and more beginning to realize the many points in favor of automobile delivery, because it brings them more business and because it is cheaper than any other method.

The Menard Commercial Car

has been designed to meet the demand, and is a quiet car of great reliability, reasonable speed, with a large reserve of power and a frame of strength and size capable of carrying a load of considerable bulk and up to 1500 lbs. weight.

The design of tires used on the Menard Commercial Cars reduces the cost of maintaining tires to a nominal sum. There are many other features of the Menard that will impress it upon merchants for its superiority above all others.

Send for prices and full particulars.

Dominion Wholesalers in Convention

Annual Meeting Attended by Members of Trade From Western, Eastern and Central Canada—Contract Selling Plan, Rights of the Trade, Price-Cutting, Secret Rebating and Extension of Credits Among Questions Discussed—Archibald Miller, of Quebec, the New President.

Staff Correspondence.

Toronto, Feb. 15.—Wholesalers from as far west as Calgary, Alta., and as far east as St. John, Moncton and Fredericton, N.B., were present at the annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild at the King Edward on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

Hugh Blain, Toronto, the president, presided. Matters of common interest to the wholesale trade were advanced and discussed, among the more important being the Contract Selling Plan, the Secret Commissions Act, the Work of the Credit man in a Wholesale House, the Bulk Sales Act, loyalty among members and to manufacturers, and instances of where some manufacturers were said to be discriminating against wholesalers by selling direct.

A pleasing feature of the convention was a banquet given by the Toronto wholesale trade to the visitors on Monday night.

President Hugh Blain, Toronto, called the convention to order about 10.30 and introduced Mayor Geary of Toronto, who welcomed the visitors to the city. He referred in complimentary terms to the word "Guild" which had such an historic connection.

"If the Dominion Wholesalers' Guild," he said, "were a combination of interests with the object in view to inflate prices and to combine as a monoply against the common good of the people, I would not feel so keen in welcoming you here. But I know a number of your members, and I am glad you gentlemen, although competitors in business, can work together from Halifax to Vancouver for a common good."

Archibald Miller, Whitehead & Turner, Quebec, vice-president of The Guild, replied, referring jocularly to Toronto weather, which he had expected would have shown a considerable advantage over that left in Quebec city; but in this he was doomed to some disappointment. He appreciated the welcome of Mayor Geary and stated that so far as the Guild was concerned there was no combination to unduly enhance prices. There was no body of men doing business on such a small margin as the wholesale grocers.

A Voice from the West.

W. Georgeson, Georgeson & Co., Calgary, Alta., vice-president for Alberta, added his appreciation of the Mayor's welcome.

He rejoiced in the growth of Toronto and Montreal. The advance of these important cities as manufacturing centres meant growth of the West and as the West grew so would these and other large eastern cities.

The Guild to him was an ordinary association of members assembled to see what could be done to prevent ruin among its members.

"For 25 or 30 years," he added, wholesale grocers didn't earn common interest on their money. They got together, not to create a monoply or to enhance prices, but to consider questions of mutual benefit which would place distribution on a better basis."

ARCHIBALD MILLER, Quebec City,

Elected President of Dominion Guild for 1912.

Some Money in the Bank.

Dominion secretary, J. Stanley Cook, of Montreal, presented the financial report for the period since the last meeting, covering a term of nearly two years. It showed receipts of $3,987.47 and expenditures of $2,121,04, leaving a balance of $1,866.43. There is also an item of outstanding accounts of $450 for which there has been no bills sent out as yet and which adds that amount to the total balance.

Working of Bulk Sales Act.

Thomas Jobin, of Winnipeg, reported on the workings of the Bulk Sales Act in Manitoba. It is one of the best acts for the grocery trade that has ever been passed in the West. This Act makes it impossible for a seller of goods in bulk to defraud his creditors. The man who purchases a retail business has to ascertain the debts the seller owes, and if the seller does not make arrangements for settling such debts, the purchaser withholds that amount; because if the seller fails to meet such liabilities, he will be held responsible for them. Before the Bulk Sales Act was in force, Mr. Jobin explained, a man could sell his business, receive the purchase price and decamp, thus defrauding the wholesale men from whom he had purchased goods on credit.

President Blain reported that an act similar to this had been brought before the Ontario legislature for some time back and he was lead to believe that the government was now in correspondence with those provinces which had already adopted it, no doubt with a view to passing such an act in Ontario.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

On opening the afternoon session, President Hugh Blain presented his annual report as follows:—

My first duty is to thank the Guild for electing me President. Unfortunately I was unable to attend the last annual meeting, and therefore had not an opportunity of personally expressing my appreciation of the honor you conferred upon me, but took occasion, shortly afterward, to do so by letter, setting forth my views in terms, which, I trust, met with your approval. Had I been present I would, most certainly, have done my utmost to have declined acceptance, feeling that it would be impossible for me to do justice to the position. Having, however, been so honored in my absence, I considered it incumbent upon me to comply with the decision of the annual meeting, and have done the best I could for the advancement of our business interests during my incumbency of the office.

Result of Improved Methods.

I congratulate the trade upon a fairly satisfactory business last year, largely the result of the adoption of improved business methods. It is true that this was but sharing in the general prosperity of the country, but a share in the general prosperity can easily be lost by want of proper attention to sound business principles, and can be more than lost if the thoughtless and dishonest practices of the secret cutter and contract breaker should prevail, and to which it is my duty to make reference later on.

In my capacity as President, it has been my duty to give careful thought and study to many matters of vital import to the trade, and I am convinced that our future welfare depends, to a great extent, upon a high standard of business ethics and well organized provincial associations.

It cannot be assumed that an individual house can, or will, adopt or carry out a broad policy for the betterment of trade, for in such cases we are apt to restrict our vision to immediate surroundings, and look only at a superficial or temporary advantage. It is only by getting together and frequently discussing the question of trade, that we can hope to maintain a high standard that will give general and continued satisfaction.

In this connection I regret to say that I have been called upon (during the year) to sanction the dissolution of the Halifax Guild. This branch of the Guild seems to have had difficulties, which a well organized Guild could have prevented, and I hope the Halifax Guild will at an early date, re-organize and cordially co-operate on a basis that will secure for the trade in the east, a healthy, active, beneficial provincial association.

New Applications During Year.

On the other hand it has been the pleasing duty of the Executive Committee to approve of the following applications, and instruct the Secretary to advise the applicants of their election as members of the Guild:—

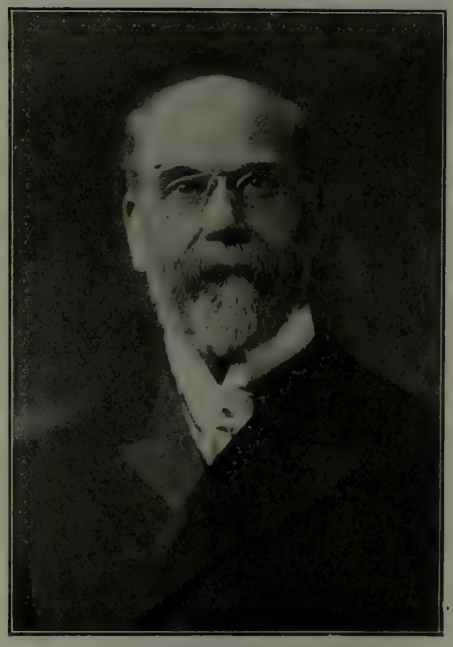
C. Stephens Co., Limited, Collingwood.
W. P. Jamieson & Co., Limited, Winnipeg.
Quebec Preserving Co., Quebec.
Stewart & Mobley, Prince Rupert.
Magnan & Chevalier, Joliette.
Puddington-Wetmore-Morrison, Limited, St. John, N.B.

In connection with the application of W. P. Jamieson & Co., Ltd., Winnipeg, there was no provincial Guild to give its approval. Under the circumstances we passed the application as approved, and would ask you to confirm the action taken. The $150 which would have gone to the Manitoba Provincial Guild, has been held by the Dominion Guild, subject to your direction. In the absence of the Provincial Guild, I would advise one-half of the amount being paid to the Guild which the applicant joined, and one-half retained as its share by the Dominion Guild. I would also advise that, in all similar cases, a like course should be followed.

Membership Qualification.

It has also been my duty to decide the question of the qualification for membership. The constitution provides in the form of application for membership, in addition to other clauses, the following:

"In making this application we beg to state that our business is being carried on as a strictly wholesale grocery business, and is not a co-operative concern, whose members or stockholders are made up of retail merchants; we are not in any way connected directly or indirectly with any plan or agreement by which our stockholders are to receive dividends on the basis of their purchases, neither are we interested directly or indirectly in the profits of any retail grocery business."



HUGH BLAIN, Toronto,
Retiring President, who Presided During the Sessions and at Banquet Monday Night.

This must be signed by the applicant, and is the condition on which membership is given.

Injustice of Wholesaler to Consumer.

My decision, under the circumstances, that anyone interested in a retail business is not eligible to become a member of a Wholesale Grocers' Guild, and therefore, even if the application has been passed cannot be a member, will, I trust, receive your approval and endorsation. The wholesale trade has recognized the injustice, and has endeavored to enforce the rule, especially so far as preventing the wholesaler from selling to the consumer, and hence the rule, making any merchant having a retail counter, ineligible for membership in the Wholesale Grocers' Guild.

The evolution in trade in recent years has, as you all well know, gradually put upon the market, in package form, many lines of goods that were formerly sold in bulk. These goods being put up under well-advertised brands, and in more or less attractive packages, have gradually attracted the attention of the consumer, and to-day we find a large percentage of goods, that were formerly bought and sold in bulk, now being bought by consumers in packages, and here it might not be out of place to remind the consumer that to some extent at least, the enormous sums of money spent annually in advertising food products and putting them up in expensive packages, are paid for by the consumer, and this, to some extent, adds to the cost of living. This reference to the evolution of trade in package goods is not to discuss the wisdom of a trade in package goods, but to point out the effect it has upon our business, as distributors of food products. The essence of it all, the indubitable fact to be remembered, is, there can be no competition in the same brand of goods without the annihilation of that brand. The reason is, the retailer and the wholesaler cannot work for nothing, and will not interest themselves in the sale of a proprietary article, the margin upon which will not carry its fair share of the expense of distribution.

Secret Rebate Question.

While I regret to say, judging by their action, some manufacturers have not given this matter very serious consideration, I am pleased to say many manufacturers have, and it is a well-known fact that the great volume of trade is in the protected brands.

This condition of trade has had to be faced, and carefully dealt with, because it gives an opportunity for dishonest competition. It gives an opening for the unscrupulous employer and the dishonest employe. It opens the field for the secret rebater and contract breaker, for, as you know, the secret rebater in prices and discounts on proprietary goods is essentially and necessarily dishonest, because he is obliged to carry on his nefarious business dealings secretly.

The secret rebater deceives himself into the belief that he is making money by securing business on which there is a present diminished profit. He deceives himself into the belief that he can keep from his customers and the public the fact that he is a criminal in the eyes of the law. If a proprietor, he deceives the manufacturer, whom he is in honor bound not to deceive, and he deceives his competitors who are in honor bound to maintain good faith with him.

A Criminal Act.

The commercial traveler who, without the knowledge of his principal, sells pro-

Our artist's impression of the president and some of the guests at the head table during the banquet on Monday night.

prietary goods at cut prices, or gives a rebate off the stipulated price to a merchant or a merchant's clerk, is unquestionably a criminal in the eyes of the law, and the merchant or clerk who buys from a commercial traveler and secretly accepts rebates is unquesionably a criminal in the eyes of the law, the penalty in either case being, a fine of $2,500 or two years' imprisonment, or both. The language of the Act is definite and plain, and it would appear certain that even the owner of the goods, if he bought on the condition that the goods should be sold at a fixed price, would be held to be criminally liable if he gave a rebate to a buyer. It is reasonable to believe that the court would hold such an Act as a secret rebate. It would certainly be a breach of faith and a moral crime.

Comparison With Railway Methods.

I may say further, that to sell a proprietary article, having a recognized fixed value, at a less price to one person than to another, is as much a discrimination and as morally wrong, as it would be for a railway company to charge one shipper for the same quantity of goods, carried under the same conditions between the same points, a lower rate of freight than it would charge another shipper. The railway that would do such a thing would not only be heavily fined, but would be exposed by the press, and held up to the world as a corporation without a soul—as a dangerous enemy of public rights, entitled to the severest execration and condemnation, and perhaps be threatened with the cancellation of its charter. The Dominion Railway Commission would certainly soon bring such a company to a speedy recognition of its responsibility to the public.

If it is legally wrong for a railway company to charge more or less than the right price for freight on an article, it should surely be morally wrong for a firm or individual to charge more or less than the right price for the article itself. If this be granted, (and I do not see how it can be denied) then the only question that remains is, can the right price of an article be ascertained, for if it can, then the price so ascertained should, undoubtedly, me enforced just as rigidly as the rate of freight. It must at once be admitted that an absolute standard for like commercial commodities is impossible, because a uniform quality of commodities can neither be made nor maintained, but these conditions do not apply to proprietary goods. A proprietary article can be, and frequently is, of a uniform standard quality, and such an article should have a uniform standard fixed price, and this price should be established and enforced in the recognized channels of trade, and should govern the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer.

Suggests Trade Commission.

To accomplish this, there should be a properly constituted Government commission, with powers commensurate with the requirements, and corresponding in scope and authority with that of the Dominion Railway Commission. I would, therefore, strongly recommend and urge the creation of such a commission by the Dominion Government. When goods are placed upon the market, they become articles of commerce, in which the public have an interest, and when fixed prices are established they should be subject to the examination, adjustment and approval of such a commission, and then they should be properly enforced. The interests of all parties concerned could, in this way, be properly looked after and protected. I conceive it to be the duty of a Government to extend to every citizen equal rights and privileges so far as it is possible to do so under legislative and administrative authority. There is no question I know of which is of more importance to the consumer.

Act Regulating Combines.

If the consumer has reasonable grounds for believing that he is being charged exorbitant prices for goods, he has the means of initiating an investigation under the Hon. Mackenzie King's Act, passed by the Dominion Government for the investigation and regulation of combines. This is an admirable Act up to a certain point, but it stops being readily effective at that important point where a properly constituted permanent commission would take up the investigation and conduct it to a satisfactory conclusion.

This feature was urged upon the Hon. Mr. King when the bill was before the House, but he had doubts as to whether the views of the country were sufficiently formed on the subject to support such advanced legislation. I am confident that public opinion would now justify and endorse the creation of a permanent commission to investigate and regulate business conditions, which, it must be admitted, is of the utmost magnitude and importance to the people.

Under the workings of such a commission, it would have been impossible for the Standard Oil Company to have accumulated such enormous sums of money, and it would have been equally impossible to require an expenditure of over $20,000 for the wholesale grocers to have established the fact that they were doing a reasonable and legitimate business.

Some of Year's Accomplishments.

Allow me to say that, in the absence of such necessary legal machinery, we have endeavored to adopt methods that will carry out many of the objects to which I have referred, and have succeeded to a considerable extent in placing the business on a higher, more honorable, and more satisfactory basis. We have succeeded in getting the great majority of the principal manufacturers of proprietary lines to sell their products on the "Contract Selling" or "Protective" plan. We have succeeded in getting the trade of Ontario to agree to uniform terms, and to abolish discounts for cash, and instead, allow a reasonable rate of interest for the payment of an account before it is due. I trust all provinces will also adopt these terms, because it has been found that where a discount for cash is given, it has been impracticable to adhere to the stipulated time for the allowance.

The Retailer's Profits.

Retail trade, in this way, can depend upon receiving equal and uniform treatment, which should prevent the cutting of prices, and restrict competition to fair and legitimate business methods. It should be one of the highest aims of the wholesale trade to require all fixed prices so arranged as to afford their retail customers a reasonable profit. For example, no retailer should have to pay 50c a dozen for an article that has to be sold at 5c each, or $1 a dozen for an article that has to be sold at 10c each. If he does, he is doing business at less than cost. Goods to be sold at these figures should not be invoiced at more than 40c and 90c, respectively. To these prices, freight and all other expenses must be added, which leaves a very small profit to the retail merchant.

The Retailer a Necessity.

It must be borne in mind that the retailer is a necessary convenience to the public. Thoughtless people, who talk loudly about the producer selling direct to the consumer, and doing away with the middleman, do not seem to be able to look beyond their own environments. A few rich, or rather, fairly well-to-do people, who do this loud talking, may be able to buy direct from the producer, but what about the great majority, and especially the poor, who can only buy as necessity requires?

To say that one-fifth of the population of cities like Montreal or Toronto, or, indeed, any of our large cities, could buy direct from the producer, would be an assertion which could only be honestly made by someone fit for an asylum. The great bulk of the people must have the retail store to go to, and the cream of the business done otherwise, only impairs the service of the great majority, making the quality of the goods kept by the ordinary store poorer, and the cost greater.

Injurious to Community.

It is doubtful if this mistaken cupidity of the few is an advantage even to themselves. Certainly, as a rule, it is not, whole it is injurious to the rest of the community. The same conditions and the same reasoning apply to the wholesale distributing trade. How almost impossible it would be for anyone commencing a retail business to buy the goods required, if he could not go to a wholesale house, where what he wants is assembled together in large quantities, under the most economical system, instead of having to apply to the thousand and one producers of each article, at greater expense.

While there may be exceptional instances of individual benefit, it has been established beyond question that the regular channels of trade afford the maximum of economy and convenience, and secure an army of experts who select for the consumer, wholesome and suitable goods. If these established channels must, on the grounds of public economy and convenience, be retained, they should be kept in the state of highest efficiency. I would recommend that appointment of a committee to confer with the manufacturers and the retailers, to consider the whole question and define as clearly as possible the rights and duties of each, the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer.

I have endeavored, and I trust successfully, to show that the established channels of trade should be maintained in their highest efficiency, and if so, the retail trade should be as fully protected as possible. It is clear that if the great body of retail merchants are to be protected, they should not be subject to undue or unfair competition. The wholesaler should sell only to the retailer, and the retailer should buy from the wholesaler and sell to the consumer, and the manufacturer should sell only to the wholesale distributer.

The Alberta Vice-President, Wm. Georgeson, looked as hale and hearty as the west he came from.

Cost of Living Problem.

The high cost of living is one of the absorbing topics of the hour, for which, the idea is prevalent, that the grocer is chiefly responsible. So far as the wholesale trade is concerned and the articles dealt in, this is not so. Please bear in mind that the wholesale grocer does not handle farmers' produce, such as flour, meat, poultry, vegetables, fruits, cheese, butter, milk and eggs, except such of these as are canned, and I am safe in saying in the most absolute terms that the profit for distributing canned goods, both wholesale and retail, is never unreasonable, and is frequently less than the cost of the service. If you eliminate these articles of daily consumption, and consider only the articles which the wholesale trade deal in, you will find that there has been very little advance in prices.

W. G. Craig, of Kingston, then president of the Ontario Wholesale Grocers' Guild, in his address in 1910 quoted figures which showed prices had not materially advanced. In bringing the figures quoted, up to date, I find that the position then taken can still be maintained. These figures show that tea, sugar, currants, raisins and rice have advanced, but these advances have been world-wide, and complaint cannot fairly be made as the result of conditions affecting the Canadian trade alone. Apart from these articles, there has been practically no increase in the price of food products usually handled by the wholesale trade, and I desire to add that there is not a trust, combine or merger in the wholesale grocery business.

The Retailer Upheld.

It is true there have been heavy advances in the articles produced by the Canadian farmer, such as I have mentioned, for which, however, the retail grocer cannot honestly be held responsible. There is no class that labors so strenuously with so meagre compensation as the retail grocer, nor is there any class that caters so fully to the wants of the public. He is daily up in the morning purchasing produce, while the rest of us are asleep, and working at night after we have retired. To succeed, he requires to work continuously, with the utmost vigilance, and few of us realize how much our convenience and health depend upon his efforts.

It must, I think, be admitted that protection adds to the cost of living, while it also adds to the population and to the comforts and happiness of life. I think it may be accepted as an axiom that if we are to have a high standard of living, we must have a high standard of employment and abundance of it. This can only be done by the establishment and maintenance of all kinds of industrial pursuits, which create what we call the "home market." I quote from the editorial page of the Globe of January 10, as follows:

> "Sir Edmund Walker never said a truer word than when, after pointing out that last year our imports increased over eighty millions while our exports declined four millions; he added that we must enlarge the volume of products we have to export, and either lessen our imports by curtailments of expenditure or by manufacturing at home, many of the articles we buy from abroad, especially from the United States.

(Continuel on page 39).

The Management of a Retail Business

CASH DISCOUNT AND CREDIT.

By H. C. Carson, F.S.S.

We have now reached June, the sixth month of operation of these two stores, and, as forecast in last week's article, the shopkeeper No. 2, has found real difficulties staring him in the face. Of his accounts payable, amounting to $2,317.67, all but $900 is past due, and statements received indicate that a number of his creditors are growing tired of his dilatory tactics.

He is compelled to crave their indulgence, which, of course, is granted, but naturally further purchases are not encouraged. His chief necessity now is to sell so much as possible for cash, and to collect his outstanding accounts receivable. But cash customers are no longer attracted to his store. It has lost that spick and span appearance which is at least an outward semblance of prosperity, and those who have the cash invariably exercise the function of choice as to where they will spend it.

Cash Trade Disappearing.

His trade, therefore, is almost wholly restricted to credit patronage, and under the circumstances it would seem that the less goods he sold, the better off he would be. But he has not realized this. Nor has he realized that insolvency may be brought about by other means than an excess of liabilities over assets. And so he blunders on in his stupid way, extending more credit while his is shut off at the buying end.

In the meantime his stock has been seriously depleted (purchases amounting to only $150) both in quantity and variety, and he cannot fill his customers' orders completely, even if he would. His sales on credit for June have amounted to $1,500, and for cash to only $200. His collections, notwithstanding special effort put forth, have reached only 20 per cent. of the total amount due, or $650, out of which he has been compelled to settle his local personal accounts, $300, as shown previously, store expenses for the month, $150, and living expenses, $50, being half his usual amount. To 12 of his creditors he has forwarded remittances of $30 each on account, as a peace offering, and all thankfully received by them, no doubt, but with a mental reservation, in all probability, to secure the balance as speedily as possible, and to sell him only for cash in future.

A Belated Regret.

The full seriousness of his situation has at last dawned upon him, and as he proceeds to cast up his accounts at the end of the month, he is filled with regret that he did not stick to the trade at which he had been trained—a skilled mechanic—instead of venturing on the troublesome sea of business, without even an elementary experience to guide him through the commercial shoals and quicksands. Scores are wrecked in the same way each year.

Business capital consists of two things—knowledge and money, the latter being more the adjunct or accessory than the former, and the records of the mercantile agencies show that inexperience is the basic cause of a big majority of the failures. The accounts of No. 2 stand as follows:—

Merchandise.

Stock on hand June 1	$2,375.00
Purchased during month	150.00
	$2,525.00
Sales $1,700 at 75 per cent cost.	1,275.00
Stock on hand June 30	$1,250.00

Receipts and Disbursements.

Cash on hand June 1	$33.00
Received on acct.	650.00
Cash sales	200.00
	$883.00
Paid creditors on acct.	336.00
Wages and other expenses	150.00
Personal accts. and cash	350.00
	$836.00
Cash in hand June 30	$47.00

Balance Sheet.

Assets.

Cash in hand	$47.00
Acct. receivable	4,083.64
Merchandise	1,250.00
Fixtures	1,000.00
	$6,380.64

Liabilities.

To sundry creditors	$1,807.67
Net worth	$4,572.97

The books show, therefore, that he is worth $1,072.97 more than when he commenced business, that he is apparently solvent, but, nevertheless, in such a condition that he cannot continue business successfully. His stock is lower than the original installation by exactly 50 per cent., and he owes nearly $2,000, all past due, with only $47 cash in hand.

Consults His Creditors.

He has only one alternative, and he takes it. The state of affairs is laid before his creditors by his solicitor. They are kindly disposed towards him, for he has been honest in all his transactions, and offer to assist him in liquidating the business. His competitor, No. 1, offers 80 cents on the dollar for the stock, which is accepted with the approval of the creditors, and the landlord is generous enough to pay him $500 for his fixtures. With the proceeds of stock and fixtures, amounting to $1,500, and cash on hand $47, he pays his creditors off, all but $260.67, which balance he contrives to collect from his outstanding accounts, making settlement in full.

He has retired from business, a sadder, but wiser man. Instead of $3,500 cash with which he started, he now owns accounts receivable with a face value of $3,822.97, and is free from debt. It would serve no useful purpose to pursue his course further. He is probably back at his trade, which he should never have left, while his lawyer is making the usual effort to collect the delinquent accounts. If he nets $1,500 from these he will be lucky, on which basis his six months' venture will have cost him $2,000, in lost capital.

The Merchant Prospering.

Merchant No. 1, in the meantime, continues to prosper. He is adhering to the rules he has laid down for his guidance, and his trade is increasing week by week in consequence. His business is now well organized. His credit is established, and we will leave the trading and financial end of the enterprise, and take up, next week, improvements in equipment and system, which will enhance the efficiency of his service, reduce waste to a minimum, and otherwise add to his reputation as a successful merchant.

THE SUGAR SITUATION.

In our last issue, an advance of 10 cents per cwt. in sugar was briefly announced. Another advance of a similar amount took place on Saturday.

This movement of strength in the sugar market was not altogether unexpected by those who have followed the situation closely. It will be remembered that during January, when the majority of the trade were expecting big declines to come in sugar, we emphasized the fact that there was a big shortage of sugar in the world and that until production made up that shortage, sugar could be expected to hold high.

The outcome of the Brussels Convention, however, gave reason for caution. Russia is allowed to export 200,000 tons yearly of her surplus raws. England wanted this increased to 500,000. The convention has decided to allow an increase of 150,000 tons this year and 100,000 next year. It was generally expected that at least 150,000 increase would be allowed this year, and the fact had already been discounted in the markets.

Attention has turned to the Cuban crop, which is not turning out very favorable. Up to February 6, the total receipts were 157,000 tons less than to the same date in 1910, and which serves as a strong feature unless this deficiency is made up in whole or part later on.

There is a big shortage of sugar in the world. We know exactly what can be expected from Russia. The Cuban crop is backward. A strong spring demand for sugar is expected.

These are reasons that speculators have faith in the future, and are likely to continue so, while consumption holds up.

A LIFT FOR THE RETAILER.

It is gratifying to find some daily newspapers who have the good sense to appreciate the retail merchant as a prominent part of the community and who realize that a profit must be made on the goods he sells. When a prominent paper like the Montreal Herald comes out in defence of the merchant, the matter deserves some special reference.

> "An interesting but misdirected experiment," says the Herald under the caption, 'Business and Philantrophy,' "was made in New York the other day by a well-meaning but, it is to be feared, impracticable clergyman who combined business and philantrophy in a crusade against high prices for food. He opened a store in the east side of the city in which all the necessaries of life were to be sold to the poor at cost price. The store was next door to a small grocery kept by a German woman, who protested vigorously against the sale of groceries at cost so near to her, on the ground that she had to pay rent, rates and taxes and had a living to make. The woman's argument was so conclusive—there were no allegations of extortionate charges against her—that an agitation followed, and the Rev. Madison C. Peters, one of New York's best known clergymen, was constrained to move his at-cost-for-cash store to another locality, where it is quite likely he will meet with further trouble. He does not seem yet to realize that his resourceful combination of charity and business is antagonistic to the general sentiment of the community, notwithstanding the fact that there are in the city hundreds of thousands of needy poor who are oppressed by the high prices of food. A benevolent movement for the relief of this class is to be commended, but a movement supported by the purses of the wealthy and philantrophic and organized on the basis of charity to compete with legitimate business cannot hope to succeed unless it confines its operations to persons who are the proper objects of charity. No merchant can carry on business and support himself and family by selling goods at cost."

The spirit of the above is to be highly commended, and it is to be hoped other influential newspapers will come to see the injustice of their unfair high cost of living crusade against retailers—for the sake of popular opinion—who are not only the backbone of any community, but who are recognized the world over as absolute necessities.

ROLLED OATS UP AGAIN.

Another advance of 10 cents per bag has taken place in rolled oats. This is the second upward movement of a similar amount from the low point reached during December.

The higher values do not come as a surprise to those who have been following our market reports. We pointed out even while the market was declining, that the lower values were unwarranted in the face of the steady market for the raw material, and that a reaction could be expected when price-cutting had subsided.

Such has been the case. Following an advance of 10 cents per sack in late January, another increase in price took place on Saturday last. The raw material holds up strongly and rolled oats can be expected to rule steady to firm.

WESTERN WHEAT SITUATION.

At last something definite seems to be coming out of the petitions of the western grain growers for lower freight rates to United States wheat centres for the surplus grain in the country.

It has been definitely reported during the last week that tariffs have been filed with the Interstate Commission allowing similar rates for barley and flax to Minneapolis and Duluth as are in existence to Port Arthur and Fort William. These new rates, it is understood, will be effective on March 7. This agreement will be effective on all railroads, and in addition, the C. P. R. has also filed a through tariff on wheat and oats, which will go into effect on the same date. Barley and flax shipped after March 7 to Minneapolis will have no restrictions placed upon it.

The reduced rates to Duluth, which went into effect some time ago, in connection with grain shipment, were for export purposes only, but now that this further concession has been obtained, it is expected that the movement south will be heavy. It means that farmers will now be given a chance to dispose of the great bulk of the tough grain to be found in the prairie provinces, as a market will be found in Minneapolis.

The buyers for such quality will, of course, be milling companies, and the grain will be shipped direct to them, thus calling for no elevator storage.

It has been reported by both the C. P. R. and C. N. R. that all foreign cars may be used for shipments to the south, and if these are not sufficient, local cars may be utilized.

A WEIGHTY ARGUMENT.

The editorial on Selling Milk from Horseback in last week's issue has called forth an expression of opinion from a Grocer reader.

It was intimated in the editorial that selling milk from horseback got around the license charged for selling from "vehicle or store" in a certain city.

Our reader claims that "horseback" is a "vehicle". He reasons thus: "Horseback" is a "conveyance" and a "vehicle" is a conveyance, therefore "horseback" is a "vehicle," using the axiom that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another.

But is "horseback" a vehicle? Webster's dictionary says a vehicle is "that in which anything is or may be carried." This might, one would think, include the saddle. But Webster, with a desire no doubt to create a controversy, qualifies himself and says further it is "any kind of carriage moving on land either on wheels or runners." This word comprehends coaches, chariots, gigs, sulkies, waggons, carts of any kind, sleighs or sleds.

But never a word about horseback. It may be presumed that Webster did not anticipate the milk license in the city under the limelight, when he defined the word, or the method some would use to evade the by-law.

Be this as it may, the city council where the law is gotten over through a technicality, doesn't appear to be taking steps to bring the horseback system of delivery under the vehicle section. The members of it have either been outwitted by the new delivery man or they are badly fooled.

The controversy nevertheless remains. Is horseback milk-delivery vehicular delivery? If not, what is it?

BUY A WATCH.

Cumbersome methods in business should be discarded and replaced by those of a scientific and systematic character. The retailer or any other business man who sticks to the years gone by for his methods is going to have a difficult row to hoe in the present and future.

A story was told by one of the speakers at the National Canners' Convention in Rochester, N.Y., last week, which well illustrates the point.

A young man had inherited a grandfather's clock from his grandfather. For years the big clock had not been running and stood in the garret covered with dust and minus considerable varnish. At last the grandson decided the clock would be a useful and attractive bit of furniture were it going.

It was beyond his skill, of course, to start the works. He determined to take it down to the town jeweler and have him look it over. Not being in very affluent circumstances he could not afford cartage very well so decided early one morning to carry it to the clock maker. All went well till he was turning a sharp corner and accidentally bumped into a pedestrian with the result that men and clock went sprawling on the pavement.

The pedestrian picked himself up with much ill humor and rebuked the one who was the cause of his trouble.

"For God's sake, man, why don't you buy a watch!" he inquired in wrathy tones.

It is up to all of us to discard our "grandfather's clock" in business and getting down to the less cumbersome and more systematic "watch".

START LEAP YEAR DAY SALE.

The last day of February presents another opportunity to the grocer and general merchant to work up something special which will serve to arouse greater interest in the store and also work for better business.

February 29 is "Leap Year Day" or the "Extra Day" of 1912. It behooves the merchant to take full advantage of this extra day presented to him to boom sales to the greatest possible extent. Whatever sales made this day are "extra" in assisting the dealer to beat his 1911 record.

If the "Leap Year" idea has been used extensively in a town or neighborhood since the opening of the year, it might be well to name this your "Extra Day Special." Repetition of an advertising scheme or heading soon causes it to lose its attractiveness. Thus the reason for the "Extra Day" idea.

It is well to have something special for this day. Some attractive figures might be quoted on a few articles. Better still make it a day on which to introduce some new line or lines which you have recently stocked and with which your customers are not yet well acquainted. Use your window, interior display and advertising towards this end.

Some special variety of goods might be featured, such as teas and coffee, canned goods, cereals or dried fruits. "The Extra Day is Canned Goods Day" or "The Extra Day is Dried Fruit Day," might serve as an advertising slogan, while window and store could be made to work in unison with this idea.

The success of an extra day enterprise depends to a great extent on adoption of a catchy slogan.

The value of such special days in making sales should not be underestimated. When properly carried out they are a material help in improving business.

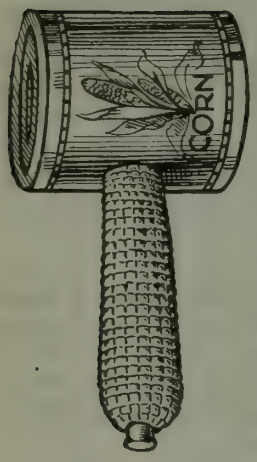
Many Canadians at Canners' Convention

More Than Hundred Interested in Canning Industry Inspect Great National Exhibit of Canners' Machinery and Supplies—Growth and Development of This Important Trade—Food for Thought for Retailers — Progress Made Through Publicity Campaign.

(Staff Correspondence.)



The President's Baton.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 15.—That Canadians are much interested in the association of National Canners and allied industries was clearly demonstrated by the fact that more than a hundred from the northern section of the continent were in attendance at the fifth annual convention held here from Feb. 5 to 9.

The convention was the greatest on record. It was the best from the standpoints of attendance, enthusiasm and in the quantity and importance of machinery and supply exhibits.

This convention of National Canners' Association, Machinery and Supplies Association and Dried Fruit and Canned Goods Brokers' Association embraces members from all over America. The size to which it has grown, as indicated by the attendance of between 4,000 and 5,000 visitors, shows the enormity of the canned goods business and the importance of it from a food supply consideration. Prominent speakers, not only in the industry, but those connected with the Chemistry Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, Institutes of Technology, Industrial Research, as well as the Commissary General of the United States army, told of the development of the canned goods trade during recent years, the advances made in quality and the part borne by canned goods in the feeding of an army.

Canadians Inspect Exhibits Closely.

Probably the biggest feature of the convention, so far at least as the Canadian canners present were concerned, was the exhibit of machinery and supplies in the Machinery Hall at Exposition Park. These included tin cans, labels, solder, paste, seeds, salt, corn huskers, all kinds of canning machinery, apple corers, parers and peelers, canned corn shakers and other articles the ordinary person never dreamed existed. To many visitors the exhibit was a revelation. There was never a moment that Machinery Hall was not extensively populated during the three days of the convention. The Canadians present included heads of many large firms and their employes, and every bit of machinery was carefully inspected by them all.

President W. R. Roach, of Hart, Mich., called the convention to business on Tuesday morning. Facts and figures of great interest to the retail trade, who have the selling of canned goods in their hands, were presented by various speakers illustrative of the phenomenal advances in demand, production, quality and use.

Speakers showed how this article of diet had revolutionized the feeding of an army, and how it has lessened the chances of starvation to a great extent among sailors, fishermen and explorers, who meet with misfortunes on the sea.

Samuel Haserot, a Cleveland, Ohio, canner, pointed out that nowadays canned goods consisted of only pure, fresh fruit or vegetables, with addition of salt, sugar and spring water, sterilized by intense heat, and with no chemicals whatever present. These statements were substantiated by United States Government officials, whose duty it is to test the food supply of the nation to determine whether or not foods are manufactured under the Food and Drugs Act.

Canadian canned goods are recognized to be the equal, and in cases superior in quality to United States foods, so that the retail dealer can have no hesitation in increasing their sales.

Protecting the Nation's Health.

The famous Dr. Wiley, chief of Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, was one of the principal speakers at an open meeting in Convention Hall.

He spoke on The Conservation of National Health, and emphasized the necessity of Governments, as well as individuals, doing their utmost to prevent the existence and spread of deadly contagious germs. Had he had the governing of conditions relative to good and bad health, he would have made good health contagious, instead of disease.

The chief blame for spreading of disease he laid to governments, federal and municipal. In places where strict measures were in force, and where efforts were made to conserve health, disease was at a premium. Down in Indiana there was an official who looked after this. One could not now find a fly in a grocery store there, so strict and careful were the laws.

Canners Packing Better Goods.

"Canners are finding out," he remarked, "that it doesn't pay to can poor goods, and that it doesn't pay to can water. They are now giving us nutritious foods, which prevent the diminishing of vitality, and hence, infectious diseases. For one is not so liable to contagion or sickness whose vitality is great."

An important address was given by Geo. B. Wason, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, on the need of business men in our governments.

The Need of Business Men.

"It was the duty of every good merchant," he said, "to see that the country is represented by business men. You cannot persecute the great industries. They are necessary to the stability of the country. Members of governments were too often prone to overlook this and listen to the general surface talk."

Importance of Publicity.

More time was given to the question of publicity than to any other. During past year this has been a prominent duty of the secretary, but for the future much more extensive plans have been made.

Canners, supply men and brokers, as well as wholesale grocers, are all keen on extending this phase of the work. It will work to their mutual benefit, and a fund of $100,000 is being looked forward to.

In the past there has been a great deal of prejudice against canned goods, aided to a large extent by the daily press. "Cases of sickness," as J. P. Olney, of Rome, N. Y., put it, "have been known to be attributed to ptomaine poisoning, if the patient had eaten canned goods at any time during a period of two years."

Poisoning Cases Exploded.

One of the important duties of Frank E. Gorrell, the secretary, has been the following up of such reports, and out of 150 cases of ptomaine poisoning reported, not a single one was found to be due to use of canned goods. The Publicity Fund is for the purpose of investigating such reports, and for removing the prejudice the people have to a large extent against canned goods. The American Can Co., through its general sales agent, H. W. Phelps, New York, made a large contribution to this fund. The brokers, supply men and wholesalers are all assisting in the work. Addresses on the value of this publicity campaign were given by J. P. Olney, Rome, N. Y.; H. W. Phelps, American Can Co.; C. L. Jones, president National Brokers' Association, Peoria, Ill.; Walter B. Timms, of wholesale grocery firm of Austin,

DOMINION WHOLESALERS IN CONVENTION.

Our great excess of imports is evidence that we are going into debt at a rapid pace. There is need for much care in the selection of subjects for exploitation, so that we may pay interest on the capital borrowed abroad, and reap a reasonable margin of profit besides."

To this, I think, every earnest, thoughtful Canadian will subscribe.

The Grange Alliance.

A rather curious incident occurred in the proceedings of the recent meeting of the Dominion Grange, which were exceedingly interesting, bearing in mind the high color given to the discussion, when a speaker advocated an alliance between the farmer and the laborer. How the farmer is going to pay lower prices for his supplies by high wages being paid to the artisan, or the laborer get cheaper food by the farmer getting higher prices for his products, is a question I cannot readily solve. Personally, I would welcome such an alliance. It would lead to a compromise of views and would be educational and beneficial. What we want is the closest alliance among all classes, exercising due regard for the interest of all concerned, and thus tend to make us a prosperous, a happy, and a contented people.

There are many matters of interest to the trade, to which I would like to refer, but my address is already too long. Let me remind you, in conclusion, that the objects of the Guild are:

"To foster and promote the interest of, and goodwill among its members, and on broad and equitable lines to advance the welfare of the wholesale grocery trade of the Dominion of Canada.

"To eliminate or minimize abuses, methods, and practices inimical to the proper conduct of the business.

"To establish harmonious relations between manufacturer, jobber, and retailer, to the end that the jobber be universally recognized as the best channel through which the manufacturer can distribute his products to the retailer.

"To assist in the enactment and enforcement of laws, which, in their operation shall deal justly and equitably with the rights and interests of the consumer, retailer, jobber and manufacturer.

"To have business conducted on legitimate lines, to discourage dishonest practices and the subsidizing of jobbers' employes by manufacturers."

These objects should be observed if we are to have the confidence and respect of each other and of our fellow citizens. We must lay broad and deep the principle of honesty in business, and act upon it, as the foundation of our daily life and conduct. With unswerving devotion to what is right, let us build a character for ourselves that will make our homes happy; enable our children to follow our example with pride and satisfaction; prepare us as a Christian people, not only to uphold the stability and integrity of the state, but inspire us with a firm belief in that great truth that "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

References to the Address.

Archibald Miller congratulated the president on his address and referred particularly to terms of credit adopted by Ontario wholesalers, but suggested eliminating the interest clause. It should in his opinion be net 30 days without discount for cash.

F. T. Smye and H. C. Beckett also referred in complimentary terms to the address. Mr. Beckett proposed that it be printed in pamphlet form and distributed among the trade. He made a motion to this effect.

Wm. Georgeson, Calgary, suggested that the report be printed and circulated to-morrow morning so that the members will have an opportunity to study it and discuss it intelligently.

Zeph. Hebert added his commendation to the address. Many good ideas were expounded and the address should prove beneficial to all. It certainly should be printed and spread broadcast.

T. B. Escott, London, concurred also in this view and it was decided to print the address and circulate it in pamphlet form.

Address by Zeph. Hebert.

"The Essentials of a Credit Man" was the subject of an address next read by Zeph. Hebert, Hudon, Hebert & Co., Montreal. It was as follows:—

Essentials of a Credit Man.

An address containing much food for thought was that given by Zeph Hebert, Hudon, Hebert & Cie., Montreal, on the "Essentials of a Credit Man." It was as follows:—

"At the request of our worthy president, I have prepared a paper, the subject of which is: 'The Essentials of a Credit Man.' Of course, the opinion that I have formed in this respect may probably not be shared by everyone. Nevertheless, it is by the interchange of views and ideas that the real and true notion of a thing may be brought to light.

"What I consider to be the real characteristics of a credit man are, first and above all, intuition and keen insight.

"If one is not gifted so, I claim that he lacks the essential elements which constitute the ideal credit man.

"Tuition and experience are undoubtedly very valuable assets, but, if they are not backed up by the true essentials, they lose much of their usefulness.

"It comes to this, that the credit man must be able and apt to size up a prospective client in a very short time. And he cannot do so unless he is endowed with those attributes, which are inherent to his functions.

"Now, how is the credit man to perform his work, and what has he to find out in one that wishes to enter upon business intercourse with his firm?

What is Left Unsaid.

"He has to allow the man who asks for credit to speak and lay before him his reasons for his doing so. And, as regards this, he must be so well up in his work that whatever the applicant does not say or forgets to say, he must very quickly notice and use skill in finding it out.

"Now, let us take, for instance, a young man who wishes to start a business of his own, and who calls on the credit man of a firm, with the intention of soliciting a line of credit.

"What has the credit man to find out about him? Very often these beginners have very little capital, and, therefore, if the credit man finds out that it is desirable to open an account to one of them, on what grounds is he justified in doing so?

"The financial responsibility being very little, then there must be another responsibility which is, of course, the moral one.

"And what constitutes this last responsibility? Knowledge of the business, good schooling and training, sound judgment, honesty, ambition, energy, working power.

"If one has all the above, then he is worthy of confidence, and he can be trusted for a line of credit.

When Insight is Needed.

"It is there and then that the credit man has got to use his intuition and keen insight which will enable him to appreciate fully his man and rest satisfied that he has all those characteristics which command confidence.

"One may reasonably remark that, in no few cases, many of the possessors of the so-called moral responsibility may lack some of the features already pointed out.

"I admit this, as it is not every one's privilege to be so endowed, yet some of those traits may exist in one in such a marked degree that they may offset those wanting.

"Again, the credit man has got to bring fully into action his essentials, so as to determine if the commanding features are of such a nature as to overwhelm the shortcomings.

"The innate credit man soon finds it out, or rather he has that feeling that guides him either the one way or the other.

"These essentials will naturally bring to one assurance and self-confidence, which will enable him to take a very quick decision.

Depend on First Impressions.

"Now, once a decision has been taken, it always proves bad policy to change it, as, as experience has taught, the first impression is always the best.

"One may say that there are many clients that the credit man never sees, and, therefore, where does his intuitive power come in? The reply is that he has got to exercise it through the instrumentality of the traveling salesmen, and to be enabled to do so, he must have studied very minutely each and every one of them as regards the bent he may have in reference to the sizing up of one.

"Therefore, when a new client is recommended by a traveling salesman, the credit man being fully aware as to what extent he can place reliance in the aptitudes of a particular salesman, in this respect, can at once determine the worth of the recommendation and act upon it.

Early Action Advised.

"In a general way, the credit man must ever be vigilant, as nothing should escape his notice. He must follow every account very closely and detect at once any laxity or remissness which ought to be investigated immediately, and acted upon, if need there be.

"Even those accounts that are considered to be indisputable and absolutely safe must, as a matter of principle, be watched carefully.

"In this respect, although the intuitive power of the credit man need not be exercised to the full extent, yet, it ought not to relax all the same.

"The functions of the credit man are of such a nature that he should be picked out with great care by every firm.

"Indeed, in a business organization, he is called upon to fill one of its most important parts.

Places Credit Man Before Salesman.

"A full pledged credit man is worth more to a firm than the ablest salesman, and this, on account of his functions, which require great tact. It is he who opens up accounts, who lays down the policy to be followed in connection with each and every one of them, and who may also, when he thinks fit, close any undesirable one.

"Oftentimes he will be called upon to grant favors to clients, either with renewals or in exercising tolerance. Therefore, any mistake he may make in this direction may have the effect of having a firm lose a good client through lack of tact or judgment.

"On the other hand, through want of judiciousness, if too lax with a customer, it may bring about a loss to the firm.

"That is why in many business houses the functions of credit man are always held by a member of the firm.

"It is obvious that the credit man can help very largely to the development and progress of his firm, just as he can, on the other hand, prove to be harmful to it.

"To resume, the functions of the credit man are so important and they are of such a particular nature, that he who wishes to discharge them properly must be endowed with the essentials already pointed out: intuition and keen insight."

A resolution was passed that Mr. Hebert's address be printed in the minutes and circulated was moved by A. H. Pafford, Davidson & Hay, Toronto, and W. C. Cross, Hall & Fairweather, St. John, N. B., who referred to it in most complimentary terms. President Hugh Blain and H. C. Beckett added their appreciations.

TUESDAY MORNING.

On opening the Tuesday sessions, H. C. Beckett, Hamilton, Ont., discussed the Contract Selling Plan of placing proprietary articles on the market. He read from report of the Ontario Guild meeting last July, which was adopted by the Ontario trade and signed by the members. This explained the character of the system whereby manufacturers fixed the price of their product to the retail trade to prevent cutting.

The Rights of the Trade.

E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., followed with an address on "The Rights of the Trade and Manufacturers." It will be remembered, Mr. Johnston was the defendant counsel in the Wholesale Grocers' Guild case, which was concluded three years ago.

One of the chief contentions of Mr. Johnston was that men could unite for the purpose of self-preservation; that in the work of self-preservation prices might be raised. But, he declared, prices could not be unduly enhanced simply and solely with that one object in view. Neither could a body of men unite to create a monopoly in restraint of trade.

"In all movements," he said, "underlying whole schemes there were some principles that must be considered on the erection of the foundation, having respect to the future.

"The whole success of a body of men depended in the first place on unity. The United States and Dominion of Canada were a combination of units. Unless unity exist among the various parts the whole will fail. Workmen who unite succeed because they acknowledge a sovereign head, with the result that they are standing to-day against capital in a way they never stood before."

Unity Must be Permanent.

Besides unity, continuity was necessary. "The working out of the final end needs unity for 365 days in the year, and not simply at your conventions here once a year. Continuity has built railways against all obstacles. Persistent struggle has given us our civil and religious rights, and it is needed in your association," said Mr. Johnston.

"The individual in the association, to make it successful, must be subservient to the government of the body. There should, too, be an observance of trust and confidence and business morality, and lastly, no organization can succeed unless possessed of business courage.

"These result in the object desired and ultimate success of such a body of men as the Grocers' Guild.

Law Gives Right to Unite.

"You have the right by law to unite. You can form a union at any time under any circumstances, if you bear in mind that what you do in your union is necessary to your self-preservation.

"If men unite for the sole object in view to raise the price of sugar from 5 to 7 cents per lb., then that is a conspiracy against trade and is illegal.

"But if necessary for your self-preservation and the general welfare of the trade, I take it, that the law justifies the reasonable raising of prices. Combines are not illegal on that basis. They are only illegal when they unduly enhance prices or prevent competition.

"When prices are raised under the two methods named, although the results may be the same, the motive power is entirely different. One is done without any necessity therefor, and is illegal; the other becomes necessary in the interests of trade, and is legal."

Trade a Condition, Not Fact.

Mr. Johnston gave some strong arguments why changes in methods of trade were necessary to illustrate the contention that trade was not a 'law,' but merely a 'condition.'

"Trade is not a law," he said, "nor a contract, nor a principle, nor anything existing as a fact. Trade is a condition of affairs, an evolution of certain conditons resulting from the manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing of goods.

"What was good trade 40 and 50 years ago is not good for to-day. We improve conditions, and in order to succeed it is necessary to improve the conditions of trade.

"The law says if that is the object it is not illegal to unite and not punishable. You have to meet the varying changes in conditions that you or the retailer or consumer do not suffer. You have the right of co-operation with certain lawful principles in view. You have the right to co-operate for purposes of economy, better facilities for running your own business and right to co-operate in the interests of wholesale grocers in Canada.

The Making of Profits.

"You also have the right to make your terms and profits, so long as you are not unreasonable. You are justified in making them more advantageous to your general welfare, and in doing so you are beyond the reach of the law."

Fred Smye, of Hamilton, took an active part in the deliberations.

The complication of trade through wholesale and retail channels made much consideration necessary. The wholesaler and retailer in a way were agents of the manufacturer. The latter wanted, of course, to get as much profit over cost of production as possible. But he has competition to meet and so must place his product at a reasonably low figure to secure his share of business. Whole salers had to purchase through the manufacturer and pass the goods on to the retailer at a fair margin, and at the same time see that the retailer could sell those goods as cheaply as possible to the consumer.

Making Living Profit.

"Your test should be: 'Is the price enough to enable me to have a fair profit?' You must go on amending until you have that living profit. As long as the increase is not more than a living profit it does not come within the law. If you are ever called to court, that is the point you will have to explain."

The Wants of the People.

The speaker next took up the now time-worn question of Cost of Living.

"It is alleged the cost of living is too much," he said; "that it has increased too much, due to combines or conspiracies. Take any of you who were in business 25 years ago. Are you making as much profit as you did then?

"Twenty years ago rent which was $15 or $16 is now $25 and more. A very important reason for the advance in cost of living is the increased wants of the people. Theatre seats then were 50c, whereas now they are $1.50 to $2. Commercial travelers cannot go about the country unless they pay about double what they did 20 years ago. The day was when we would be content to wear the old fullcloth tweeds produced on a hand loom at 25c or 30c a yard. To-day we must have our tweed at $1.50 and $2, and the tailor charges us more for making than the cloth costs.

Desires of Humanity Reign.

"If we could limit the desires of humanity we would have lower wages and cheaper goods. The mode of life, the method of dressing have all been advancing and wages are a great deal higher to enable people to live."

Relation With Manufacturer.

"If you succeed you must exhibit the greatest good faith to yourselves and to the manufacturer. But you will have interlopers. You will find that while 99 out of a hundred are endeavoring to carry out their contracts and agreements, the one will be cutting prices and betraying the association. It is better to have 50 men and all honest than 500 with one dishonest. If an individual member interferes with the smooth running process, the whole fabric will be disorganized. The beginning and the end of an undertaking must be seen at the same time.

"You want a handling profit on the goods. You must have a margin for losses, interest, discounts; you want a margin of safety for the future. That is your position. The manufacturer wants the highest price he can get because you can only get the article through him. If there were no competition, prices on many goods would be much higher than they are."

Advises Conferences.

Touching on the Contract Selling Plan, Mr. Johnston could not see any objection to a fair and full discussion with the sugar, tobacco, canned goods men, etc., because prices would then be dealt with from actual knowledge of conditions. By seeing the manufacturers and laying before them exactly your position a great deal of good results would follow. Leave them to fix their own prices, so long as you can agree with them on your margin of profit.

"The manufacturer has what you haven't. Bulk of the manufacturers have bonuses by way of a protective tariff, which benefits them by lessening competition from outside sources. But you lose by having to carry a more valuable stock than otherwise would be the case if competition were greater."

Commission on Trade.

A board or commission was suggested similar to the Railway Commission to settle matters of dispute or argument in trade. The only place to settle such matters now is in the criminal court, whereas they should be settled in civil courts.

Mr. Johnston made a strong arraignment of the Combines and Investigations Act of 1910. "It must have been hewn out of a block of wood by a broadaxe," he declared. Six men had power to hale a suspect before a judge, who, if he thinks there is enough evidence, commits him to a Board of Investigation for trial on stated facts, gazetted, etc. If the alleged offence is continued after 10 days a fine is imposed at so much per day. Later on the defendant may be acquitted in court. "There we have two tribunals and different verdicts and different penalties for the same offence—a state of law which is an outrage."

Term "Combine" Not Defined.

The same Act, he stated, gave different definitions of combines. It would be only justice, he considered, that if the alleged "combine in restraint of trade" were found not guilty, the six complainants should shoulder the costs.

In closing, he urged the trade to be honest with themselves in the observance of the Secret Commissions Act, which should be made clear to everyone.

A vote of thanks, moved by H. C. Beckett and Z. Hebert, was tendered Mr. Johnston.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Association Loyalty.

F. T. Smye gave an address on "Association Loyalty," which was the opening of the session on Tuesday afternoon. His address was as follows:

"The subject which has been assigned to me is one of such wide scope and so inexhaustible and far-reaching that it embraces the whole conduct of our everyday business life. Loyalty in every sense is the foundation of national and commercial honor. It has been from time immemorial, and will continue to be, the base through all ages, therefore, I say it is a large subject, and if the few thoughts that one person could compile can only create some light on the importance of individual and collective loyalty, as applied to the grocery business of our Dominion, will feel amply compensated for the privilege of speaking to you to-day on this subject.

"In reviewing the trend of trade in this vast and growing Dominion we can look back to the days when Canada had but few wholesale grocers and when the business conditions were not so strenuous as they are now, the volume was smaller and the business was carried on with small expense, and there was no such a thing as an association or trade conventions, but some of those pioneers tell us that they had trade evils to contend with in those days, principally price-cutters who demoralized profits while they remained in business, but who, as a rule, generally made a failure and were soon gone and forgotten.

Number of Houses Increased.

"To-day, however, conditions are different, the volume of business and the number of houses have vastly increased with the growth of the country, and it has become more vitally important to form associations to regulate the distribution of the many millions of dollars of foodstuffs which are handled by the wholesale grocers of the country, and it is a serious responsibility which has been placed upon you to establish the commercial status of the grocery trade so that our successors can build wisely on the foundations we are laying; and I feel that our progress is slow, owing to the lack of interest in many of the provinces, but it is never too late to mend our ways.

Association's Work in South.

"In reading accounts of the progress made in the last few years by the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, I cannot help but feel that we are very lax in our duties as business men of Canada when we do not follow their glorious example. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States have a most complete organization, with head offices in New York, where a competent staff is employed to keep the entire trade posted, and although the expense of such an organization is great, the outlay of each individual firm has been repaid a thousand-fold; the interest is maintained by the appointment of committees to carry on the various sections of the work and by the appointment of directors in almost every jobbing point, thereby assuring uniformity in the work, and that is where we fail. One province knows nothing whatever of what is going on in other provinces, through lack of organization, and the time is now, at this meeting, for us to do something towards better organization throughout the Dominion.

Where Much Trouble Arises.

"If we neglect our duty in this regard we cannot help but have confusion, and the longer you hesitate the worse it will be for us all. We must cultivate a greater degree of confidence in our competitors. Trade jealousies are the cause of most of our trouble; we are too ready to believe ill of our neighbor and to take the word of our travelers, who, in turn, are loaded, instead of personally interviewing your competitor to find out his side of the case. And if you will adopt this method you will discover very often that there is no foundation whatever to your charges. Many cruel injustices are practised by hasty judgment, and those of you who have experience know this to be so.

Classes of Jobbers.

"In my experience as a Guild officer, in the work of having agreements signed for the betterment of trade conditions, I have found that the jobbers of this province are divided into three classes, viz.:

1st. The houses who sign an agreement and who back up the officers of the Guild and are ready to make sacrifices.

2nd. The houses who sign up, but who are lukewarm, and at the first provocation, whether real or imaginary, fall down.

3rd. The houses who sign anything presented to them and who never intend to keep their word.

"Of the first class there is nothing we can say too praiseworthy. They are the men whose good name cannot be bought with filthy lucre and who have builded their business integrity on a solid rock, which no tide will ever wash away, and when this battle of life is past we will say, 'Well done, good and faithful,' and will write their obituary in classical language.

The Good Example.

"To the second class I would suggest that they look around them and figure out the houses who are the most successful in their business, and you must conclude that it is the house who stands for good business morals who always succeeds. Make up your mind to back up your association in their commendable work, and even at personal sacrifice, as it will be only temporary, as with class one and two united, class three will be so ostracized that it will soon be promoted to the higher grade. The house that wavers is the food on which the crooked house feeds and often destroys the whole structure. Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone, where business honor is at stake.

Conscience and Cowards.

"To the third class, embracing the agreement-breaker and secret rebater, we are forced to say they have the contempt of every honest man, and in their inmost soul they must hate themselves 'for conscience makes cowards of us all.' We are glad to say, however, that this class, whereas they create all the trouble, they are in the great minority, and it is our duty to stamp out this evil with all our might. We have laws that can reach this class, but we have been too generous in our nature to enforce them, but there is an end to everything, and we hope that we will eventually be able to eliminate this class from the grocery trade of Canada. We have tried educational methods; let us continue them, for, 'while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return.'

A Plea for the Future.

"Move away from cliques that are crooked, to the hilltops of mightier thought. Don't try to undermine your rival; it only comes home to you. You don't need to do this; have confidence and go on. Let us be nation-builders—be men of sight, for opportunity is knocking everywhere. As someone has written: 'Thank God for a country of good hard work, where men raise blisters and do not die of gout, where it is not birth or rank, but get-up-and-get that makes great men.'

"May we grow, may our present be happy, and may the future be one of steady progress, and may we understand that that which is worth having costs time, costs labor and sometimes blood."

Loyalty to Manufacturers.

An address by H. C. Beckett, of Hamilton, on "Loyalty to Manufacturers," followed, in which expressions of opinion were made regarding the standing by contracts made between manufacturer and wholesaler, and the consideration of the wholesaler by the manufacturers.

The Bulk Sales Act.

"The Credit Exchange" was the subject of an address by L. J. Ball, secretary of the Ontario section of the Canadian Credit Men's Association, in which he touched upon the operation of the system and the Bulk Sales Act. The Grocer has in previous issues gone into this subject fully, but extracts from Mr. Ball's address will be interesting.

"The Credit Men's Association," he said, "stands for one Federal law covering bankruptcy, as opposed to as many provincial laws as there are provinces. We stand for a law under which a judgment secured against a debtor in any one province will hold against him in any other province. We stand for a law to prevent the giving of cheques without funds in the bank to cover them. We have now under preparation a Bulk Sales Act, which will be introduced at the present session of the Ontario Legislature, by which any trader, in order to dispose of his goods in bulk, must get the written consent of at least 60 per cent. of his creditors, otherwise the purchaser can be held for any of his liabilities. Such an act has already been passed in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and will, I believe, come before the Legislature of Alberta at this session.

"You listened yesterday, with much pleasure and profit, to a very able address by Mr. Hebert, on "The Qualifications of a Credit Man." He referred to the need in a successful credit man of experience, tact, knowledge and intuition. The purpose of our association is to help the credit man broaden his experience, as well as develop along all the other lines mentioned and, at the same time, help him to better safeguard the interests of his firm in the matter of etxending credits."

Secretary Stanley Cook saw the funny sides to the banquet addresses.

The "Selling Direct" Question.

General discussions took place regarding some manufacturers selling direct to the retail trade in small, as well as large quantities, members considering this to be unfair to the wholesalers who were asked to compete with the same goods at wholesale prices. It was maintained that the best system to pursue in such a case would be to appoint manufacturers' committees from the various guild members in each province and confer with the manufacturers in question. Assistance could also be given by the Dominion Guild, if necessary.

Canned Goods Delivery.

The question of contracts with the Dominion Canners was also on the board, particularly in respect to the percentage of delivery on wholesalers' orders. As pointed out in The Grocer some weeks ago the canners, who, by the way, were complimented on their methods in the past, will this year deliver sixty per cent. of tomatoes, peas, corn and beans based on orders of last year. The Dominion Canners were represented by J. J. Nairn, R. L. Innes and W. R. Drynan. In event of the canners not being able to supply the entire orders, wholesalers will, after getting their percentage, be free to buy in the open market, as many were forced to do last season on account of short packs.

W. P. Eby, Toronto, raised the point of the number of brands of canned goods and considered the interest of the trade would be best served by lessening it as much as possible. It was frequently the cause of delayed delivery, delays in checking, etc.

W. R. Drynan stated the canners were anxious to reduce the number, and suggested the wholesale trade cutting out private brands. This would be appreciated by the canners.

Supplying the Retailer.

A. E. Provost, Provost & Allard, Ottawa, asked the convention to consider the advisability of placing the retailer upon a similar contract basis as the wholesaler. Thos. Wilson, Groceries Limited, Toronto, opposed this on the grounds that each wholesaler should be responsible for what percentage of retailers' orders he should deliver. Competition was too keen, he maintained. This was the general impression. Members told of having to go into the open market to purchase tomatoes at a much higher price than $1.15—the opening—and to supply their trade with 100 per cent. although it meant an actual loss to them.

After the passing of a number of complimentary resolutions to the president, committee in charge of the banquet, etc., the election of officers was made with following results:—

COMPETITORS MEET ABOUT BANQUET BOARD

Pleasant Entertainment on Evening of First Night of Wholesalers Convention—Addresses by Guests in Response to Toasts.

Toronto, Feb. 15.—The banquet given on Monday evening by the Toronto wholesalers to the visiting delegates at the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild convention was a pleasing diversion to the steady work done during the day.

The King Edward meeting room of Monday was transformed into an elaborate banquet hall. The guests, apart from the visiting wholesalers, included Sir John Gibson, Lieut-Governor of Ontario, Archdeacon Cody, W. P. Gundy, Toronto Board of Trade, and a large number of representatives of manufacturing concerns.

Hugh Blain, president of the Guild, presided and in many happy speeches introduced the various speakers. Mr. Blain referred to the recent honor conferred by the King on Sir John Gibson, and to his life of patriotic and zealous devotion to his country. Sir John, was given three hearty cheers and a tiger, when he rose to acknowledge the compliments.

"The wholesale grocers' association was," he wittily remarked, "composed of that division or class that might be termed, 'the boys' and the good fellowship existing had taken all the stiffness from any formality that might have been present at first."

Again he said referring to H. C. Beckett: "I used to meet him occasionally on the streets of Hamilton some years ago and always congratulated him that he was still at large." He gracefully and modestly acknowledged the president's compliments on the honor of Knighthood he recently received.

Advocates Technical Education.

Archdeacon Cody replied to the toast to Canada. He explained his connection with the trade by being among the ranks of the consumer, and the consumer was necessary to the wholesaler. His address was along lines of morality and ethics in business and was greatly appreciated. He strongly advocated young Canadians gaining technical knowledge and the learning of French as well as English to assist them in their business. For such, he maintained, Canada presented a fair field and a splendid opportunity.

W. P. Gundy, vice-president of the Toronto Board of Trade, who was mistaken frequently during the evening for Wm. Georgeson, of Calgary, was another of the speakers. He showed the connection of the Board of Trade with the advancement of trade and commerce. Its duties included getting good roads, efficient canal service, opening of unexplored territories, pulp lands, waterpowers, etc.

Zeph. Hebert, Hudon, Hebert & Cie, Montreal, who contributed many suggestions during the convention, also replied to toast to "Our Guests." Mr. Hebert referred in terms of commendation to the principles involved in Archdeacon Cody's address, and pleasantly remarked that when next he came to Toronto he would give his address in French and would expect all to be able to listen to him intelligently. He noted the very friendly relations between the Quebec and Ontario wholesalers—this entente cordiale was necessary to their welfare at large. Competition would of course ever exist but business could be carried on in a pleasant manner and those elements eliminated that proved disadvantageous. The fundamental principles of right and justice were conducive only to good results to all concerned.

Music and songs interspersed the program and added to an enjoyable evening.

WHOLESALERS SELLING DIRECT.

Retailers Confer on the Subject—Left To Individual Towns and Cities.

Toronto, Feb. 15.—W. J. Mellen, president of Brantford Retail Grocers and J. A. McIntosh and Jno. O. Carpenter representing the Hamilton Grocers were in the city on Tuesday, attending the convention of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild. They held a conference with local men on the question of wholesalers selling direct to hotels and other consumers, a matter which has frequently of late been discussed by associations throughout the Dominion.

They decided that in view of the differences in conditions existing at different centres, it would be well to leave this matter in the hands of each individual association. As every town has certain conditions peculiar to itself, the question is such as could hardly be handled to the best advantage by the trade as a whole.

M. Moyer, of Toronto, represented the Retail Merchant's Association at the conference.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.—Lent, which opens on Wednesday, will bring an increased consumption of canned fish, to the benefit of the grocer. He should do his part by featuring salmon, sardines, smelts, herrings and lobsters.

Other lines of canned goods should be in good demand from now on also. Vegetables are scarce and high in price and the canned article should for this reason be brought into favor. Fruits should also do well.

One jobber points out that demand apparently had not been so keen for fruits this year as last. The plenitude of apples as compared with the extreme scarcity last year is one reason offered.

"I think," he said, "that if demand had been as heavy as last year, the situation in many lines would not be extremely acute." As it is, several lines are in limited supply. Special mention might be made of raspberries and strawberries, the pack of which was so small last year.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS.—

Sugar.—Now up to 5.65 per cwt.

Rice.—Primary markets strong.

Evaps.—Firm.

Toronto, Feb. 15.—The upward trend of the sugar market has supplied perhaps the most interesting market feature during the last week. Following the 10c advance recorded briefly in our last issue, refined prices increased another 10 cents on Saturday last. The market shows considerable strength at advance, attention having been directed to the rather backward showing being made by the Cuban crop. Buying has been on heavy scale since strength became apparent. Refiners and jobbers note brisk movement.

The approach of Lent brings certain kinds of foods into prominence. Substitutes for meats will be in good demand. These the dealer should feature. Honey, dried fruits, and canned goods should sell well with the grocer who brings these lines to the attention of customers. The dealer should not fail to cater to those people who observe this season.

SUGAR.—Following the advance of 10 cents per cwt. briefly announced last issue, refined prices were increased an additional 10 cents on Saturday, bringing present local quotations up to $5.65. This was not altogether unexpected in face of how situation has been shaping of late. The big world's shortage was a factor that had to be kept in view, while the unlikeliness of Russia offering much relief and poor reports regarding the outturn of the Cuban crop all had their firming tendency. The Brussels convention has allowed Russia to increase her exports 150,000 tons, which amount was probably discounted before finally arranged. England wanted it increased to 300,000 tons. Now that this factor has been cleared away, the Cuban and West Indies crops will be turned to as a guide to the market. Cuba is not showing up well compared with 1910, the last good year. In the face of this and the probability of a good spring demand, the tone of the market is quite strong.

SYRUPS and MOLASSES.—The fact that syrups and molasses are in good demand during Lent should be kept in mind by the retail trade. They should look carefully after their stocks and give these lines due prominence. Wholesalers report a brisk movement at present time.

TEA.—An indication of the confidence in the stability of tea market is afforded by the continuance of activity and steadiness since the beginning of the year. In spite of goodly increases shown in shipments for this season so far, all apparently has been well absorbed. Prospects are now for more moderate supplies over the end of the season, and although prices are still abnormally high compared with many years past, the more general opinion is that prospective receipts will not be in excess of trade requirements.

One tea firm says of the market: "1912 opens with the tea markets of the world in a still stronger position than they were at the commencement of 1911. Consumption generally continues to increase while supplies are not as elastic as distributors would wish. The trade, however, has now become accustomed to the higher range of prices, and owing to the strong probability that for a year or two, at least, prices will not have a serious setback, buyers are purchasing with more confidence."

COFFEE.—This year's sale of valorization coffee has had little, if any effect upon the market. The committee after delivering the 700,000 bags sold this year will still control 4,400,000 bags. It is pointed out that the small crops of Brazil coffee will not continue indefinitely, and when a large crop comes, possibly within the next two years, the situation will change again to one of supply and demand. The present crop is known to be small and the next crop will not be much larger: after that however, some change can be looked for. The lessened consumption is a factor that has also to be taken into account.

EVAPORATED APPLES.— Evaps. are firm in the opinion of local dealers and gradually becoming cornered up with stocks by no means large. Production last year was average, but the high prices of dried and canned fruits in general has worked for a big consumption of this line. The West has been taking considerable quantities while a fair amount has been worked for export. The market is regarded as firm.

Winnipeg, Feb. 15.—With annual bonspiel in full swing, members of various wholesale houses are busy finding enough time to play the games, entertain visitors, and look after business. The first and second events are, however, looked upon as sacred as they occur only once a year, and consequently all work that can be possibly shelved till next week is being put away, and the most of the time devoted to entertaining country customers in town, and discussing situation of the trade.

The prevailing feeling is one of optimism, and with the granting of lower rates to the south by the Interstate Commission, the country will be relieved considerably of the tension it has been living under during the last three months. All are now enthusiastic and look for record year if present predictions can be reckoned on.

Sugar performed the "ballooning act" by taking two sharp advances of 10c each within three days. While some had expected a slight advance.

Other lines to show advances are evaporated apples and prunes. Former shows an advance of ½c per pound, and the latter as high as 1c over old quotations.

SUGAR—As stated above, this line has been performing some ascension feats during the week, and as a result prices are now quoted at 20c per hundred over the figures used last week. The first advance took place on Tuesday and the latter on Saturday, and market remains firm and fairly active.

NEW BRUNSWICK MARKETS.

St. John, Feb. 15.—In so far as markets are concerned, past week with local grocers was fairly quiet, and no unusual features presented themselves, although general trade was steady and more encouraging. Beans remain firm and some firms are quoting slight increase over last week, and general increase is looked for soon. Sugar advanced ten cents on Wednesday last, followed by a similar advance on Saturday.

Much interest centres in potatoes, for which from $2.60 to $2.90 is now being asked, with chances of further increase particularly strong. Some dealers are asking a solid $3 retail, and have paid from $2.75 to $2.90 wholesale, and there seems a readiness to purchase at these prices, because of the indications for higher markets.

Eggs are slightly easier, although there is no change in price, but as the demand is good and chances for new laids in the cold weather none too bright, there is a possibility of another jump before long. At present 35 cents is the highest being asked for hennery stock, and particularly in the country market the supply during past week has been good, in face of fairly cold weather.

In butter market the prices quoted at last week's writing are still in force, although it is only in an exceptional case that more than 35 cents is being asked.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS.

HALIFAX, Feb. 15.—While wholesale grocery dealers report business a little slack at present time, retail grocers say that trade is exceptionally good for this season. Trade is well distributed among the various lines, with the exception of canned fruits. Some dealers attribute falling off in these lines to plentiful supply of apples. Dealers say, however, that the demand for this class of goods will come later on. Local dealers have good stocks of evaporated apples on hand, but there is little demand for them at present.

There was an advance on sugar this week. Standard granulated was marked up five cents to $5.75, while United Empire was raised to $5.65. Bright yellow was advanced five cents to $5.55, and No. 1 yellow from $5.20 to $5.25.

Rolled oats are firm, and are in good demand. The price is ten cents higher than last week, the quotation being $5.80 per barrel now.

MANY CANADIANS AT CANNERS' CONVENTION.

Nicholls & Co., New York; B. M. Fernald, ex-governor of Maine, and others.

Raising Health Standard.

The importance of the industry and the necessity of it was perhaps best illustrated in three points dwelt on by the new president of the National Canners' Association, Samuel F. Haserot, of Cleveland. They are as follows:

"First—The men engaged in the canning industry, as represented by the associations gathered here, have reduced and are reducing every day the cost of living.

"Second—The men identified with these associations, in studying out the details of their business ventures, have increased the average health of the nation.

"Third—This same element, by study, by investigation and by the introduction of intensive cultivation and labor-saving machinery, has increased the food outlook, from the standpoint of quantity, for the nation.

"The constant cry which is going up as to the high cost of living can in no sense be directed to the things in which these associations have been most largely interested. The preservation of the bounty of nature, when it is at its best and at its height, you will agree, has presented the opportunity to carry from one season to another the life-giving elements that, without this industry, could not have been presented to the people; not only in the case of strawberries brought from the gardens in June and July, not only in the case of sweet corn, so generally in use from the gardens and the fields for perhaps two months in the year (an inheritance of the six nations), but in the case of other desirable products of the fields and the gardens enrolled in the list of food necessities."

The new president of the Dried Fruit and Canned Goods Brokers' Association is Joseph H. Kline, Cleveland, Ohio, and Thos. A. Scott, Cadiz, Ohio, will again guide the destinies of the supply men.

Visitors Royally Entertained.

Among the pleasing features of the convention were an intertainment with refreshments and dancing given the visitors on Wednesday night at Convention Hall, and a theatre party tendered by The American Can Co. at the Lyceum, on Thursday night. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" was the play, and Mr. Phelps and his assistants had a difficult time hunting up seats for everybody.

The selection of next year's convention city has been left to a committee, but the prospects are that either St. Paul or Cincinnati will win out as strong representations from both these places were made.

NEWS OF INTEREST TO THE TRADE

Hiram W. Chamberlain, who has been president of F. J. Castle Co., Ltd., wholesale grocers, Ottawa, Ont., since its inception, has purchased the capital stock and on March 1 will take over the active management in succession to J. R. Gardner. Mr. Chamberlain has been an Ottawa resident for 16 years. He was Ottawa manager of the Toronto General Trust Co. for some years and later with the Royal Trust Co., Montreal. Mr. Gardner will give his entire time to the extension of his insurance business.

Harold Spafford, formerly of Spafford & Mahler, grocers, Chatham, Ont., and for some time past on the staff of J. H. Burnie & Co., grocers, has left for Edmonton, Alta., where he will become manager of the grocery department of the J. H. Morris Co.

The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association will hold their annual banquet on Wednesday evening, Feb. 28. It will be held at the Arlington Hotel, King St. West and from prospects will be not only a pleasant but profitable event.

Last week grocers of the Brantford Retail Grocers' Association went over to Hamilton and met their confreres in the trade there. The Hamilton grocers won the game. It was a progressive euchre contest.

Pricing Advanced Goods in Inventory

Important Question Raised By Winnipeg Reader — Percentages of Gross Margins and Expenses—A Retail Firm That Asks Candidly For Co-operation of Consumer.

*By Henry Johnson Jr.

——— Canada, January 2nd, 1912.
Henry Johnson Jr., Canadian Grocer:—

Dear Sir:—On one previous occasion I have trespassed on your kindness by writing you for information regarding one of your articles, all of which I have read with much interest. Many of the points with which you have dealt have been of particular interest to me.

As the time for our annual inventory is approaching there is a matter which, for the past year or two has given me considerable food for thought, and on which I would like to get your opinion, namely, the basis on which goods should be priced on stock sheets, which have been bought some considerable time previously and on which marked quotations have advanced very considerably.

As an example this year, take canned tomatoes. Realizing that opening prices looked particularly good last fall, we bought heavily at from $2.65 to $2.74 F.O.B. Winnipeg, and are at present retailing for 15c per tin, with prospect of an advance in the near future.

As, generally speaking, we do not figure on much more than 20 per cent. on cost as a profit on canned vegetables, writer feels that he should be justified in taking these into stock at about $2.90 per case, which, at retail price of 15c, would allow a somewhat better margin than the 20 per cent. on cost above mentioned.

I feel that as we are, of course, obliged to reduce the figures on any lines which may have declined since time of purchase, we should be justified in putting on at least a proportion of any advance which may have occurred on other lines, provided that the retail price is such as to show as much as, or a little more than, the usual percentage of profit. Canned lobster is another line re which very much the same situation obtains.

Trusting I have made my meaning clear, and awaiting your opinion in this connection, believe me,

Yours very truly, W— A— E—

I am only sorry that the mass of correspondence which reaches me prevents me from handling such matters as these more promptly; but I can only answer letters in rotation of their dates, in justice to each correspondent. But I trust I am not too late now for any use.

Profits on Selling Price.

There is obviously some error in W— A— E's statement, as these tomatoes show the following percentages of gross margin, not on the Cost but on the SELLING PRICE of $3.60 per case —15c per tin:

If bought at $2.65 per case, 26.39 per cent. minus.

If bought at $2.74 per case, 23.88 per cent. plus.

If bought at $2.90 per case, 19.44 per cent. plus.

These margins are surely good enough for anybody on such a staple; even the last not being unreasonable, though I should plan to advance until I had a full 20 per cent. margin, or over.

These same costs per case show on the COST, as follows:

If bought at $2.65 per case, 35.85 per cent. minus.

If bought at $2.74 per case, 31.48 per cent. minus.

If bought at $2.90 per case, 24.17 per cent. plus.

So it looks very much as if W—A—E— meant to write on "selling price" where he has said "cost." Of course, I have given the margin-on-cost figures merely as a mathematical demonstration, because that is never the way to compute margins.

Replacement Value Should be Basis.

Goods should be priced on the inventory sheets just as nearly as possible on replacement values—what it would cost to buy and lay down those goods at date of inventory. This because such is the only logical method. As this correspondent says, we have to reduce our values when the market declines, so we should take unto ourselves the benefit of any enhancement in values.

If all this were not true, our inventories might readily give us a false indication of our condition. We could so easily fool ourselves into feeling that we had done well after a protracted period of declining values, and we could also so readily make a poor showing if we did not take advantage of any considerable increase in the general values of goods.

Make the Safest Error.

We must, however, be very careful about this thing. Let us err, if we must err at all, on the safe side. Let us be sure to take cognizance of all shrinkages, but let us hesitate to advance our values unless, as W—A—E— says, we intend to advance our selling prices to correspond. It is much better to be in a stronger position than our records show than it is to be in a weaker position than we think we are.

I hope this may be the information W— A— E— is looking for. If so, it is, perhaps, "better late than never."

Henry Johnson Jr., Canadian Grocer,—

Dear Sir:—Allow me to thank you for information given in recent issues. I was trying to get at the cost of doing business in the directest method. I am still of the opinion that donations such as are donated for good will, should be charged in the expense account, say ¼ of 1 per cent. of gross sales; bad debts, as long as the conditions are as now, ½ of 1 per cent. of gross sales; advertising expense, 1½ to 2 per cent. of gross sales. As we figure percentage of expenses of gross sales same way should be for gross profits. I hope you will still continue your good work and wish you another Happy New Year.

McA— W—

As stated in my previous review of this man's correspondence, expense is cost of doing business. If one so desire, he can run all shrinkages and losses into expense, but to my mind it is better to run them into the Loss and Gain account where they will show up individually. It is all right to estimate ¼ per cent. here and ½ per cent. there as a kind of buffer, for the sake of safety and conservatism; but these figures must go to a final definite adjustment to meet actual conditions in every inventory, and a new start on the basis of those actual conditions must be made each new year. In other words, we should take what we find at the end of one year as a kind of "dead reckoning" by which to guide our business during the coming year; then we must readjust our course again in the light of what we find is actually the situation.

I am glad I have been helpful; thank my friend for his good wishes, and shall be exceedingly glad to have him call on me at any time again.

A Candid Statement.

As an example of frankness in making an appeal to customers for their thoughtful co-operation, here is something from the Model Grocery Company, Pasadena, California; a concern I personally know well and one I know to be successful. This through newspaper advertising:

> Please anticipate your wants and order goods enough to last a few days at a time, especially of staple articles. It is sometimes impossible for us to deliver an order RIGHT AWAY, when you wait the eleventh hour to place the order; where would we as a grocer be, if we ordered our supplies that way?

*The writer of this article is one of the most successful dealers on the continent. He has spent almost 30 years in the retail grocery business and is well equipped to answer questions and smooth out difficulties with which others may have met.

If possible, please so regulate your orders that they can be delivered on our regular delivery run; it costs lots of money to make these special trips.

We make three regular trips each day inside of the mile circle. We make two deliveries each day inside of the two-mile circle, and regular trips to all outside points. And if there is a store in the country that gives you any better service they will have to go some.

Please do not ask us to deliver any order less than 25c and always more if possible; it is expensive to make the delivery, even though we are going your way.

Please let us have your co-operation, your pleasant good will; don't scold or abuse our clerks; they are all human, and striving to please you; you will get far better results to work with them.

Good service is essential to any business; but why not frankly ask for the co-operation of the buyer? Should she not realize that pampering service is expensive and that she must inevitably pay the cost of her want of systematic ordering? Maybe the idea is worth spreading further.

Opportunities in House Cleaning Brushes

Considerable Business Going to Mail Order Houses That Could be Done by Dealers Throughout the Country — Some Special Brushes That Will Sell Well in Many Places — Sales Can Easily be Created for Them in Spring Months.

There is a good deal of business going to mail order houses in housecleaning brushes that should be secured and developed by grocers and general merchants throughout the country.

The large catalogue houses are not only selling these house-cleaning utensils but through them they secure other business which the grocer and general dealer should take care of. The only trouble is that these dealers do not stock or attempt to create demand for such goods.

During the spring house-cleaning campaign particularly, women are on the look-out for time-savers that will do the work not only more quickly but better than by the use of a rag or some other home-made device.

Special Brushes That Will Sell.

Every general dealer and most grocers of course handle scrubbing brushes, boot and stove brushes and probably a few others. There are, however, as many opportunities in others as in these.

For instance the floor-waxing brush used for waxing hardwood floors is one that should prove a good seller if it were stocked, displayed and its usefulness represented to customers.

Among the other specialties sold in large quantities by the mail order houses are the bannister brushes and hair floor brooms. The use of these can be readily appreciated from their names. There are also window brushes for cleaning windows with water and window cleaners of rubber for rubbing off the water. Many stores use these themselves but neglect opportunities to sell them to customers.

Cornice dusters for ceilings, walls, etc., glass jar brushes for cleaning fruit jars and bottles; plate brushes for silverware and bowl brushes for the lavatory could all be sold if stocked and displayed. A good brush to stock in the autumn for winter trade is the radiator brush, a narrow long handled brush that will clean with the least trouble all parts of a hot water radiator.

What General Merchant Can Do.

That all these can be sold, is proven by the extensive business the catalogue houses are doing in them. These houses are selling by means of the catalogue and have not the opportunities of the general merchant or grocer who can not only advertise them himself but can display and talk their usefulness to possible purchasers.

Have Stock Ready by March 1.

The house cleaning season will soon be with us again. Every dealer should have his stock ready by March 1 so that early customers will not have to be turned down. During March and April frequent window displays of brushes and brooms will aid sales. While brooms are all-the-year-round sellers yet many will require new brooms for their spring cleaning. By all means, however, brushes of all kinds should be stocked and displayed within the next two months. This will be their big season and the most should be made of them.

Where One Dealer Made Money.

Here is a specific instance where brushes such as mentioned above were made a paying sideline.

A grocer in a medium sized town who had never handled them was called on by a representative of a brush and broom manufacturer.

"I don't handle brushes," he replied shortly when the salesman attempted to interest him.

The traveler knew there was no valid excuse for not doing so. He pointed out that this line was well within the grocer's scope and as the housewife was interested in them the chances for promoting sales were excellent. He pointed to the handsome profits in selling brushes and at last induced this dealer to take a trial order.

He included in his first order a few dozen scrub, shoe and stove brashes as well as window brushes, banister brushes, hair brooms and some other lines.

"Now don't chuck them in a drawer or some other place where no one will ever see them," advised the traveler; "give them some display space. The profit is large enough to warrant it."

The grocer followed his advice. It was scarcely more than a month before that house received a repeat order.

Six months after this department had been worked into a profitable and extensive one. A separate portion of the store had been set aside for display. The grocer now thanks this salesman for giving him a start on a profit making side line.

INSULT TO INJURY.

Joseph E. Widener, the Philadelphia horseman and collector, told a horse story at a dinner in New York.

"There's a grocer out Elkin's way," said Mr. Widener, "who is notorious for his wretched horseflesh.

"The grocer's boy is rather a reckless driver. He drove one of his master's worst nags a little too hard one day, and the animal fell ill and died.

"'You've killed my horse, curse you!' the grocer said to the boy next morning.

"'I'm sorry, Boss,' the lad faltered.

"'Sorry, be durned!' shouted the grocer. 'Who's going to paly me for my horse?'

"'I'll make it out all right, boss,' said the boy, soothingly. 'You can take it out of my next Saturday's wages.'"

Cold Weather Hampers Fruit Trade

But Milder Conditions are Overcoming Difficulty — Firming Tendency in Some Lines Due to Cold—Potato Market Less Excited—Imports of European Stock Will Help to Steady it —Root Products Generally Firm and Scarce—Grapefruit Continues High.

Trade in fruits and vegetables was again quite seriously interfered with by extremely cold weather in many parts of Canada. The low temperature held up shipments to country dealers in many cases, while even in the cities considerable risk was run in sending goods to the trade. However, with the advent of milder weather, this difficulty has been overcome.

The effects of cold is reflected to a certain extent in the prices of some fruits. For instance, the frost in California, which affected oranges adversely, firmed the price of navels, while Floridas in sympathy have been steadied. Lemons are even more susceptible to frost than oranges, and California stock incurred marked damage, which has caused higher prices. Western Canada draws her supply from this source, while eastern Canada depends mainly on Sicily lemons. Sicily lemons are also firmer and higher, for demand from all countries has been heavy, more especially America.

There is more reason to believe perhaps that potato market, which has been soaring for some time, will now become less excited. At some centres dealers believe that market has probably reached settling point, at least for the present. European stock is now on the way in considerable quantities, and can be brought in at figure that should steady market, provided Canadian consumer takes kindly to them. European potatoes have been in such keen request by America that recent despatches indicate firming in markets across the water. New Brunswick has sent out large percentage of her crop and holders in that province continue firm in their ideas. Manitoba, which had a better crop than usual last year, has potatoes at considerably lower figure than eastern markets, but the cold weather prevents their shipment at present.

Carrots, beets, onions and other root crops were generally short crop in Canada last year. Stocks at most centres at present are small and the strong market likely to continue.

Further shipments of marmalade oranges are awaited at some markets. Grapefruit is in light supply and high in price.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The green fruit market is becoming exciting and promises interesting results. The prices show tendency of advancing all around, as result of shortage in stocks, accounted for by the cold weather. Business is brisk considering the season. Florida grapefruit, which is scarce and has been advancing rapidly of late, again shows an increase.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—Trade has again been hampered considerably by severe cold weather. Shipping of fruits has been interfered with, so that goods both coming in and going out were held up, while at times it has been so cold as to make it unsafe to send goods any distance about the city.

Marmalade oranges are pretty well cleaned up, but further arrivals are expected shortly. Navels and Floridas have been coming along in larger volume and improved quality in some cases.

Grapefruit holds firmly and the high price has, no doubt, been responsible for smaller consumption during season. Lemons are firmer and meeting with good demand.

VEGETABLES — Potatoes show a slightly higher price than a week ago, New Brunswick being quoted at $1.90 to $1.95, and Ontario at $1.75 to $1.85. Situation for a long time has been strong and the tendency upward. As noted last week, the excitement in this line is probable to subside. Many dealers believe that market has probably reached settling point, at least for present. The import of European stock is likely to steady the market, especially if it is of such quality as to win the favor of the consumer. First arrivals are expected around the middle of the month.

Quite early in the fall, the small crops of beets, carrots, parsnips and onions in Ontario and pretty well throughout Canada was referred to. This shortage combined with cold weather has gradually been firming prices on these lines. Stocks of all locally are small, especially onions. No wavering in steadiness can be expected. Valencia onions are reported slightly firmer. Shipments of California celery will increase within few weeks.

Wide Awake Methods in Retail Stores

Chatham Dealer Who Imports Early Strawberries at Loss to Secure New Trade—Classified Ad. Page in Newspaper Used by St. John Grocers—Merchants to use Auction Sales to Boom Trade — A Family Competition.

This Loss is Profitable.

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 15.—A local grocer makes a feature of handling the first strawberries of the season. To do so, he has to import extensively, at a time of year when such shipments are very precarious.

Imported fruits, and particularly imported strawberries, are rather risky commodities. This particular dealer states that, after paying duty and express charges and allowing for loss occasioned by fruit going bad, he not infrequently finds he is handling the imported berries at a loss.

"Nevertheless, we will continue to handle them," he adds. "Even though the direct transaction may involve a loss, there is a great advantage in the long run. The imported berries start a great share of the summer preserving and fruit trade in our direction. People who want early strawberries practically have to come to us. When the home grown berries come in, however, the trade of a great percentage of these people comes our way as a matter of course. Home grown raspberries and blackberries follow the strawberries almost without a break; then peaches, plums, pears and all the later fruits. We make a dead set on the fruit trade right at the beginning of the season and start it coming our way—and it keeps on coming.

"Of course, the handling of early stuff constitutes an advertisement for the store, and proves helpful to our general business as well."

St. John, N.B., Feb. 15.—On the "classified ad." page of the evening daily papers each day is to be found the advertisement of the "Two Barkers, Ltd." and it is a feature which is read with interest by a great many careful housewives. They conduct four stores in St. John now, one each in King Street West, Brussels, Main, and Princess Streets, and they so plan their affairs that the prices in all four stores are similar and "specials" are offered simultaneously. Hence, it is more easy to feature the store news from each store in combination with the others and for this purpose under a four-column head, an inch and a half with that width is used and the "special offerings" are displayed in a wide variety each with its price affixed.

The same ad. generally runs for two days. For instance under the heading "A Few of the Bargains for Saturday and Monday" are listed articles of different kinds carried in the grocery trade. It is reasoned that many people are interested in the page where the classified "ads." are displayed, as it is one which contains information of importance on many matters, and thus with a spread of four columns an advertisement is certain to attract attention.

Auction Sales to Bring Trade.

Wallaceburg, Ont., Feb. 15.—With a view to attracting the trade of the farmers, the merchants of Wallaceburg, through the Board of Trade, are making arrangements for the holding of regular free auction sales.

The scheme is to hold a regular auction market at which goods of all kinds will be sold at auction. No charge will be made to the farmers for the services of the auctioneer. The scheme has been tried in a number of United States cities and was first brought to the attention of the board of trade by ex-mayor Hugh Stonehouse, a prominent merchant.

The Board of Trade viewed the plan favorably. T. D. McGuire was appointed auctioneer and an initial grant of $25 made toward the enterprise.

Family Hunted for the Pork.

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 15.—"Advertisers should live up strictly to what they advertise," was the remark of a merchant to The Canadian Grocer, when discussing general matters. "For instance, I had a customer in the other day, who, while he did it in a jocular way, evidently had a serious complaint back of it all. He was giving a large order, and was casting his eye along the displays to see if there was anything that might tickle his palate, when his eye caught a line of——pork and beans.

" 'Do you know we have an interesting contest at our house every once in a while,' he said, with a twinkle in his eye.

"I was not at first aware that the contest had anything to do with me or my store, and I instantly took quite an interest. I enquired what it was, and said it must be nice for the children.

" 'Yes, they enjoy it immensely,' he replied. He went on to tell me how they always anticipated it, in fact it was when the last order was delivered from my store that the last session took place.

"In the end it developed that he had ordered several tins of these pork and beans. Then they got a Saturday Evening Post and turned up the Van Camp advertisement where a nice plate of pork and beans are shown, with a fine slice of pork right across the top. It seems he has offered a box of candy to the one who finds a slice of pork like what is shown in the advertisement. At first he thought he had a good joke, for hardly any pork was found in the tins. But the children did not have to buy the pork and beans and they hurried through all the tins in their vain quest. He began to find that he was soon out of pocket more to supply pork and beans for the contest he had inaugurated than if he had bought the candy straight away. So he bought the candy and called the contest off.

" 'That pork and beans stunt is the funniest of them all,' he said. 'Why in the world they advertise pork and beans when in most cases the park could be put in a thimble is more than I can tell.'

"He went at it in a nice way, though some customers think we are positively taking advantage of them. One woman deliberately declared that it was because pork was so dear that none was in the tins and that we effected quite a saving. Some times I have thought of suggesting that manufacturers should have a notice on their labels asking that complaints be made direct to the factory. It would often make it much easier for us. The only person the dissatisfied patron can complain to is the dealer. It troubles the new man, but we old stagers learn in time to have excuses for every shortcoming."

Hewitt & Armstrong, grocers, Medicine Hat, Sask., have moved into their new store on Main street. Among the fixtures installed are included an electric coffee mill, electric scales, cash register, and silent salesman.

Rolled Oats Advance 10c. Per Bag

In Accordance With Last Week's Prediction—Raw Market Still Holds Up — Cereals in Good Demand—Fair Domestic Trade In Flour—A Sale of 100,000 Bags of Flour to Bakery Firm—Domestic Flour Trade is Fair—Cornmeal Continues Firm.

Another advance of 10c. per bag, or 20 cents per barrel, is announced in rolled oats by millers this week. This is in keeping with what we stated last week, that market showed marked strength, and that millers were about to announce another increase in price. This is a total upward move of 20 cents per sack from the low point reached during December's decline. Trade is quite brisk from millers to retailers, while consumptive demand under favorable weather conditions is brisk.

There are no special features in Manitoba flour to report. Domestic consumption is on fair scale at present time. Feed of all kinds is extremely scarce, and in keen request by retail country dealers, and this fact serves somewhat to increase volume of flour from millers to retailers, as most mills will sell feed only on conditions that a certain ratio of flour be taken also.

One extremely large sale of flour to a bakery firm is reported this week. It is said to amount to 100,000 bags, the contract being spread over a year's time. Competition for such orders as these is indeed keen.

The Canadian wheat visible last week increased 203,000 bushels, and oats increased 589,000 bushels. The International Agricultural Institute estimates the production of wheat in the southern zone as 290,987,000 bushels, compared with 275,817,000 last year.

Wheat weakened slightly at beginning of week, under expectations of increased shipments from Argentine.

CEREALS.—The price of rolled oats has increased and still oats show signs of further movement. The supply, though fair at present, might offer a shortage later on, owing to scarcity of milling oats. Fort William and Port Arthur millers claim they can only find a limited supply of raw material, and soon will not be able to meet the demand. The market is now becoming interesting, and should be carefully followed.

FLOUR.—Past week has brought about no change in flour prices, nor is there any change in the general situation. The wheat market, which has had tendency to strength for some time, showed slight weakness early in the week, on expectations of larger shipments from Argentine.

Ontario wheat is still in scarcity supply, and winter wheat flours hold steady. Straight roller is quoted at $4 to $4.20 per barrel. One miller states he finds it hard to get $4.10 per barrel locally, although $4.20 is being received in Montreal.

Domestic trade in flour is reported fairly brisk for season.

A RUSKIN OPINION.

A Grocer reader sends the following: In his book, "Sesame and Lilies," Ruskin says: "It is very curious to watch the efforts of two shopkeepers to ruin each other, neither having the least idea that his ruined neighbor must eventually be supported at his own expense, with an increase of poor rates (taxes), and that the contest between them is not in reality which shall get everything for himself, but which shall first take upon himself and his customers the gratuitous maintenance of the other's family."

ONE OF EARLY SUBSCRIBERS.

The MacLean Publishing Co.—Enclosed you will find express order for $6.00, covering amount due to Dec., 1911. As I have now retired from the grocery business, I would thank you to cancel my name from your list, but I must express my admiration for your journal, as I always considered it the best and most useful paper any grocer could have. In severing my connection from your good selves I think I can almost take the credit of being one of your earliest subscribers, as I had been connected with the grocery trade in Victoria from 1872 to 1909 continuously.

With best wishes and success to The Grocer.

Making Money in Handling Confectionery

St. John, N. B., Dealer Points Out How He Has Secured New Accounts by Means of this Department—Newspaper Advertising a Great Help.

By G. P. Colwell.

It is possible for the grocer to develop a large and profitable trade in confectionery, by displaying it in large quantities, and advertising it as a prominent feature of the store.

I do not mean by saying in large quantities, that he must buy a ton or two, but sufficient to make an attractive show window. Mr. Grocer, the confectionery department is well worth spending some time and money on. It is rightly a department of the grocery store and not that of the drug store; why wait for so many of your customers to go to a druggist and pay from fifty to eighty cents a pound for the same goods you could profitably sell for forty or fifty cents, and deliver them to the home of the buyer, before he or she is ready to go for them?

Brought Business After Marriage.

A good line of confectionery will bring to your store a class of people that no other line will; it will bring the young men and the young ladies. I have now trading with me three newly married couples who when single came to my store for the box of chocolates for the sweetheart. I consider the confectionery dept. got me these three.

Advertising Brings Results.

The following advertisement is a sample of what we do to interest the consumer through the newspaper. It was in a space 3 inches square and brought extra good results.

> Lovers of Turkish Delight here is your chance to buy a pound of that Delicious Sugar Coated Pure Fruit Juice Candy at a price that will suit your pocket book. Special price for Saturday, only 15c pound. Colwell Bros. If you can't come, telephone.

Advertising in the daily papers may seem expensive to one who never tried it, but this advertisement under contract costs me a little over forty cents each night.

This special ad. brought us in on the Saturday of that week $15 worth of extra business. My profit on this special was more than six dollars besides bringing to my store a class of people that we could could not have got there under any other means. Not only did I sell these people this one particular article in confectionery but several kinds not advertised. It also helped to sell a considerable amount of groceries.

These are some of the reasons why I think every grocer should handle confectionery. By using special ads of this character one will be surprised at the turnover in the run of a few months.

AMENDMENT TO INSPECTION ACT.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster is introducing into the House of Commons an amendment to the Inspection and Sale Act. His resolution reads that it is expedient to amend the Inspection and Sale Act by providing, (a) for the inspection of feed imported into Canada, and of flour, meal or feed manufactured, sold or offered for sale therein; (b) that every bag or package of flour, meal or feed shall be marked with the name of the manufacturer or packer, the place of packing and the weight of the contents, and (c) for the imposition of penalties for offences in contravention thereof.

Abuse of Credits Result in Failures

Traveler Points Out That Too Many Grocers Are Lenient in Matter of Credit—Last Man to be Paid—Case Where Doctor, Butcher and Dry Goods Man Got Preference.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—(Special)—A traveler who has had varied experiences with wholesale and retail grocers recently relieved himself of some of the opinions he has formed in his frequent rounds of the trade. The representative of The Canadian Grocer induced him to talk on the subject of why some grocers fail and his ideas in this direction may prove of interest to readers.

His first cause of the business downfall of many grocers was the abuse of the credit system.

"Look about you," he continued, "and what do you find? Every merchant demands cash but the grocer. The boot man wants his money with every sale. So does the dry goods man, and the butcher and baker. The house furnisher may allow credit but there is more reason for his giving credit than the grocer.

"The tendency of to-day is toward cash payments. In the financial considerations of the average family the grocer usually comes last, because other retailers have demanded cash payments they have cultivated this practice in their customers. If one of the latter has a hard luck story he saves it for the grocer, because his experience has taught him that the grocer is sympathetic and "will stand for a touch."

Collections Become Difficult.

When a family's circumstances become straightened, money has to be carefully handled. And in doling out the limited sum it is remembered just what merchants demand cash and the grocer is usually called upon to "bear with us for a while until things begin to look brighter" Thus the man who is making the smallest profits is asked to carry the heaviest burdens.

"If the grocer is called upon to supply many customers of this kind," said the traveler, "it will not be long before there is a red flag hanging from his door. Sentiment is sentiment and business is business, and no one will admit that the grocer should alone be asked to play the part of the good Samaritan. Of course he must decide what attitude he will assume on this question of credit which, I claim, when not properly attended to is the grocer's greatest menace.

"Besides, when everyone else is asking cash, when there is a general tendency to educate the public into this system of doing business, why should the grocer stand aloof and still follow the old and often dangerous method that has been handed down from that period when barter was the business system and actual money was rather scarce?

Doctor and Butcher Came First.

"I need only mention by way of illustration an instance that was brought to my attention only a few days ago. The husband of a family received an injury and was for a time unable to work. A doctor attended regularly. In two weeks a grocery bill of sixteen dollars had accumulated and in answer to the grocer's request for payment, asked for supplies for an additional two weeks assuring him that a payment would be forthcoming. When the month had come the woman stated that she had too many other bills to pay. There was the doctor and the butcher. The children had to have heavier clothes and boots for the winter.

"The result is that the grocer must wait and it is hard to tell when he will have recovered this bill.

"Of course this is only a mild case, but it is quoted to show that the grocer should demand that he is placed upon

Lenten Season Opens on Wednesday

Expected to Bring Big Demand—Two Special Fish Days Next Week—Wholesalers Finding Rush of Business — Retailers Stock Fairly Heavy on Pickled and Smoked Lines—Frozen Fish in Good Demand—Market Expected to Rule Steady to Firm.

Wednesday next, Feb. 21, is opening day of Lent. The present activity on all markets indicates that busy season is close at hand. While many retailers have been preparing their stocks for some time now, there are always belated orders which bring a special rush just previous to opening day. The next six weeks can be expected to be busy ones as there are retailers who handle fish at this season who do so at no other time of the year. Besides this, those retailers who have regular fish department put more energy behind it during Lenten season.

There has been a big demand from retailers for pickled, prepared and smoked lines. Dealers generally get in good stocks to start off Lent with. The frozen lines, which are big sellers just now, they buy as they require. This is at least the method of many dealers.

Receipts of fresh fish at eastern points are small compared with other years. Halibut is in stinted supply. With a good demand, fish in general, as Lent advances, with some special exceptions, can be expected to rule steady to firm.

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL—Now that Lenten season is drawing near, dealers find themselves in midst of rushing trade. The demand, in sympathy with season, has greatly increased, and market presents a scene of activity. Supplies are sufficient to meet the call in all lines, except Labrador herring and green salt cod, which are scarce, the latter being almost entirely off the market. Oysters have already offered a shortage, having suffered greatly by extreme cold at beginning of season. The week has seen no change in prices, but judging from large demand and small stock in some lines it is evident an increase is close at hand.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN.—Catches of fish about the province during the last week have been better than usual, owing to a great extent to the fair weather which has prevailed. Gaspereaux have become more plentiful than at last week's writing, and smelts on north shore have been secured in very large quantities. W. S. Montgomery, of Dalhousie, said this week that he alone had bought more than 40,000 pounds in one day, and in ten days had bought eight carloads of smelts, all caught in Restigouche river. Other firms, among them Donald McGregor, R. J. Miller, Edward Crockett, A. & R. Loggie, and others, have also dealt extensively in smelts from north shore, so that it will be seen some fine catches have been made. The catches in the Kennebecasis river have not been nearly so large, but of late have been better than usual.

Local dealers are greatly interested in the proposal to establish a shad hatchery in the St. John river, with a view to restoring this line of fish to the numbers which were known some years ago in those waters. It is proposed to have a floating hatchery and to have it so that eggs can be secured at different points.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—With opening of Lent only a matter of days now, the trade in fish is extremely brisk. All lines are coming in for their full share of attention. Two lines with a tendency to firmness are halibut and qualla salmon, because stocks and offerings are limited just now, pointing to probable shortage later on. Winter-caught lake fish are fairly plentiful, with exception perhaps of pike and pickerel. Present indications, according to local dealers, point to general market holding pretty steady and firm during first part of Lent at present.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—The lobster fishing on the Nova Scotia coast this season is practically a failure. Majority of fishermen have had their traps destroyed by storms, and those who have traps are not setting them. The toothsome lobster is now selling at a record price. Few lobsters were offered for sale on the Halifax market this week.

Fresh halibut is now on local market, the first for several weeks. The fish are of medium size and of fine quality. The price is high and demand limited on that account.

Packers of boneless fish are now doing a rushing business. Demand is good and dealers have large orders on hand.

The stock of smoked salmon on hand is light, with fair demand. Salt codfish is now the market leader. Heavy shipments are being made daily to local points, mostly choice grocery cod.

How to Maintain the Quality of Oysters

Condition of Oysters Cannot be Improved, But Can be Maintained—Should be Kept Well Iced From Time Received — Freezing Impairs Flavor—How to Care for Shell Oysters.

Absolutely nothing can be done to improve the condition of oysters.

This is what oyster men, who should know, say of the common bulk oysters which the grocer sells. It is a quite common thing for dealers to be given advice on methods which may be used to "doctor" the slightly impaired oyster back to a perfect condition. The use of soda, of washing and dozens of other methods have been put forward as a sure thing, but it seems that they all fail in the desired aim.

Decline Can be Prevented.

But the quality or vitality of the oyster may be preserved or maintained. For instance, if the quality of a can of oysters has been slightly impaired it is impossible to bring them back to their once perfect condition but they may be kept from being still further weakened.

The grocer should not, however, wait for the vitality of the oyster to be weakened in the least. If he takes proper care of his stock when it is in proper condition it will remain so. It is astonishing the number of grocers who do not give proper attention to their oyster stocks, with the result that the quality is affected, and frequent complaints are made by customers.

Knowledge Easily Applied.

"Any ordinary small boy can take just as good care of the oyster stock as any one else," said one dealer, "so that the retailer has absolutely no excuse for allowing his stock to be affected."

Keep the oysters away from direct contact with water and ice. The old-time method of adding water and throwing a cake of ice into the oyster tank to keep the bivalves cool, all helped to diminish the quality. The oyster shouldn't be washed. Nothing should be added in an attempt to improve them. But to hold the present quality see that the space around the oyster tank is well iced. That is what preserves vitality. They should not be allowed to freeze. Keep them at a temperature that is cool but that does not congeal. And be sure to scald a package before putting more oysters into it. If these directions are followed oysters can be kept properly, customers will be better satisfied and so will the dealer.

Although freezing does not spoil oysters, still it weakens them and impairs the flavor, and this should be guarded against.

Something About Shell Oysters.

So much for the solid meat oysters. Unfortunately the sale of shell oysters in Canada is as yet decidedly small. There are also some points to be observed in the care of these.

The oyster in his own bed has the good sense and instinct to lay always one way up, or approximately so, and we must duplicate these conditions.

The packers make a point of "setting" the oysters, at is termed— that is, flat side uppermost; in the transport it can easily happen that an ugly jolt will disturb this arrangement, which should be remedied at once upon their arrival home. The oyster does not, like other fish, come to the surface to breathe; therefore, deny him all the fresh air you possibly can, smother him down in the dark barrel with a damp cloth or sack, keep his surroundings cool and spotlessly clean, and he will reward your care by recommending himself and making many more customers for you.

Care Will Bring Good Results.

There has in the past been a certain amount of dissatisfaction expressed at times by dealers in handling oysters. The changing from the old method of half water to that of solid meat eliminated some of this. If dealers will but take proper care of their stock so as to maintain the quality and satisfy their customers they will find the sale of oysters gratifying in results.

LETHBRIDGE MERCHANTS' ANNUAL.

Lethbridge, Alberta.—At the annual meeting of the Lethbridge Business Men's Association, W. J. Nelson was elected president; J. W. Bawden, vice-president, and B. L. Cope, secretary-treasurer. The executive consists of A. L. Johnston, E. J. Sehl, George Kerr, W. A. Dodman, E. Kirkham, L. H. Fowler, H. G. Clark, H. A. McKillop, A. C. Price and E. A. Cunningham.

The occasion was featured by a banquet, presided over by the newly-elected president, Mr. Nelson. Addresses were given by Mayor Hatch, E. A. Cunningham, F. W. Downer, Dr. Stewart, M.P.P., H. A. McKillop, past-president, B. L. Cope, secretary-treasurer, and others.

Mr. McKillop pointed out that the objects of the association were principally protection to the merchants in the matter of extending credits, the instigation of and check on by-laws relating to trade, protection in the matter of unjustifiable subscriptions to which the business men are constantly a prey; protection of the community against fake advertising, and numerous other questions arising out of local trade conditions, which necessarily call for co-operation of similar organizations in other towns and cities.

Secretary B. L. Cope stated that live merchants throughout the country were giving the credit end of their business more and more attention.

"During the past few years," he said, "retailers have endeavored to fortify themselves by closer co-operation through the establishment of local credit associations or rating bureaus, as they are frequently called, which keep a record of the habits of pay of the credit buyers of that particular community. While considerable benefit has been derived from these local organizations, it is only a slight measure of what can be derived by a strong provincial effort to check the ravages of the transient, the rudderless rover who is the greatest menace to our business interests. He is in the city to-day, in the country to-morrow, and the next day somewhere else, and behind him, more pungent than the fumes of gasoline, we get the odor of a myriad of unpaid bills."

Produce & Provisions

The Acute Egg Situation is Relieved

Increased Offerings From Southern States Breaks the Strong Market—Easier Tendency at Hand, Which Will Continue as Weather Moderates—Storage Eggs are at an End—Butter Steady and Marking Time—New Zealand Becoming a Factor in Supply—High Price Reduces Consumption—Lard in Good Demand.

The mild weather, which it was pointed out last week, would alone bring relief to the acute situation in eggs, has in part arrived. Down in the Southern States, where an early increase in the production of new laids was expected, but which failed to materialize on account of the set in of extremely cold weather, the temperature last week began to moderate with a consequent increase in the yield of eggs. Offerings from that section have accordingly been larger, and at considerably reduced prices, making it possible for Canadian dealers to import from across the line. Several large shipments have been brought in and are on the way, thus affording relief to the strong market which has ruled during the past few months. At the beginning of the week many Canadian markets were practically bare of eggs, as storage stocks are well to an end, and the Canadian hen has been far from industrious of late. Supplies are now on a more plentiful scale, however, and the market can be expected to ease accordingly as the weather in the Southern States and here moderates and the egg production increases.

Butter is steady and marking time. The market has reached such a high figure that consumption is being materially curtailed. Small stocks and light receipts are the rule, while an increase in home production cannot be expected for a month or so hence. New Zealand, as reported last week, is becoming a factor in the supply, a large amount being reported due in Vancouver during the next week or so, while some New Zealand stock is also on the way from England.

From several centres in Canada comes report of improvement in the movement of provisions over a week ago, but trade is as yet rather quiet. Under the high values in butter, lard is naturally finding a good demand.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—The provision market still remains firm, with a good seasonable demand. Nothing exciting has taken place in this market for some time, but there are tendencies towards a change noticeable.

BUTTER.—Butter market has perhaps never been in such a doubtful state before, and dealers are not keen on making any definite statements, as it is a toss-up whether conditions will become more satisfactory or whether the consumer will have to pay an excessively high figure.

Stocks have become extremely small, making it necessary for dealers to call upon the New Zealand market for supplies.

This, however, is not altogether a promising outlook, as prices run on a parallel with those of Canada, and past experiences have taught dealers not to put too much confidence in New Zealand butter export. It not only takes three weeks to land: but often the dealer is subject to great loss.

Dairy and fresh dairy rolls have increased this week, and show signs of further advance.

EGGS.—It is difficult to say exactly where the egg market stands at present. Local stocks are almost exhausted, and the prices of those remaining on hand have advanced greatly. The prices now ruling will likely last until the end of the week, when the situation will be relieved by import of American eggs, which will help to steady the situation and decrease the price. This market should be followed with the utmost care. The supply of selects has been entirely exhausted.

PROVISIONS.—While trade in pork products is generally reported as showing some improvement, still it has an inclination to quietude. Lard is moving well because of the high price now ruling for butter, while long, clear is also selling quite well.

BUTTER.—There is no change in butter from last week, but market still rules steady to firm. There is no doubt but that the high figure for this commodity is considerably cutting down consumption. Dealers, as stated last week, see nothing in the near future to shape the market from its present path of steadiness. Prices in Chicago have fallen from the record figure reached a couple of weeks ago.

EGGS.—Eggs were scarce at beginning of week, but offerings began to increase as the week advanced. Under milder weather in the Southern States, production has been on the increase there, and quite large shipments have been coming along to local dealers. Wall Paper Dealers Should Study Designs

To His Advantage to Study New Ideas—Kinds of Designs in Popular Favor To-day—Colors That Agree With the Eye—Paper for a Bedroom.

The change in designs of wall paper is one of the features of the business to-day with which every dealer should be well acquainted. New ideas in wall paper must be introduced by the retailer just as the introduction of many other new lines must fall upon his shoulders. It should, therefore, be one of his chief aims to know what styles are coming in and whatever tendencies may be felt in the trade.

The latest collection submitted by professional wall paper designers shows figures of an order frequently connected with stripe motives, leaving considerable spacing. This allows the introduction of background treatment which very often forms the chief attraction of patterns. As many as five and six fine blocks are employed in the making of these backgrounds. Much appreciation is shown for dimity and clothy effects, and very little metals is being used by wall paper manufacturers to-day except in cheaper grades and even then quite sparingly. Colors are rather subdued than formerly, dark reds have practically disappeared. One reason for this change is that the demand for cheap reds several years ago was so great that many people found that color being cheap was so fleeting that a prejudice against it became widespread. Large sales are made now in colors of the Scotch oatmeal variety. This is a duplex ingrain and is much superior to the ordinary ingrain which, though a little cheaper is difficult to hang, very fleeting as to color and subject to stains through chemical action of an unprepared wall.

Plain Stripes Good Sellers.

Plain stripes are very much in favor. They lend themselves to cut out border treatment so much featured at present.

The cut out border is one of the new ideas in wall paper and is being shown in a large number of designs. It is decidedly an innovation and is attracting wide interest. The lower part of the border has been cut away leaving its principal design standing out boldly against the paper. The idea has been worked into many designs and a general note of approval has been expressed concerning them.

The actual work of cutting out the required design is done by means of a die, but the extra labor required is compensated for by the result secured. With this idea there is usually a cut out base border and the corners are made in separate pieces.

The Bedroom Design.

The harmonizing of purpose and design is being aimed at more generally than usual and many striking and tasteful effects have been achieved. For instance the usual plan for a bedroom is to create a light and cheerful design in both pattern and color. The paper and furnishings of the room are made to harmonize as much as possible, the idea being carried out even to the color of the rug, the adornments hung on the wall and so on. The result is most pleasing and when done in particular colors creates a soothing, restful and at the same time rather cheerful feeling that the designer strives for in his plans for a bedroom.

A Scientific Work.

This planning might well be said to be based on psychological principles. It is a fact that certain colors have particular effects on the mind, and it is the realization of this and a knowledge of how to use it that makes the designer's efforts a success when turned in this direction. The wall paper salesman might profit considerably by taking a page from this book. But more will be said about the peculiar requirements of the wall paper salesman.

BOOK ON TRADE MARKS.

"Things to Know About Trade Marks," is the subject of an informative book on trade marks issued by the J. Walter Thompson Co., advertising agents. The purpose is to give the main features of the law relating to trade marks and to illustrate their application by examples of trade marks now in use. It includes conditions of registration, how to apply for it, procedure of the patent office, registration in foreign countries, classification of merchandise, what may and must not be included in trade marks, etc. An entire chapter is devoted to trade marks in Canada.

Made in Canada

Put your efforts behind well advertised goods

If Grocers and General Merchants will do this it will be an easy matter to simplify business. What applies to Baking Powder applies equally well to other lines of goods.

More money would be made by getting things "down fine," as the saying is. How much easier and how much nicer it would be to handle and push one brand only of a well-known and well-advertised article. We spend a fortune every year in advertising because we believe it to be absolutely the best Baking Powder possible to produce, and if our efforts were properly followed up by Merchants it would soon be unnecessary to carry a dozen or more kinds—good, bad and indifferent, as most dealers are doing now. Throw out the worthless ones.

Our 1912 Advertising Campaign will be more extensive and far reaching than ever. Each and every dealer in the Dominion of Canada can benefit by this enormous expenditure if they care to do so.

Wasted Oil Is Profit Lost

Perfect cleanliness in all departments of the grocery and general store is the largest asset to that store's success. If you are engaged in the sale of kerosene or gasolene, it will pay you to observe the most accurate and cleanly methods in its sale.

The Bowser System removes all objections of sloppy, saturated floors, and holds the oil in a tank absolutely leak and evaporation proof, measuring the required amount of oil into the customer's can at a stroke.

Always Good

A Grocer is looked down upon by his customers to whom he sells inferior soap. A grocer is complimented who recommends to them the magic cleaner, which lessens the labour of work day, and makes that duty a pleasure instead of a task. No laundry soap is so good, and none so pure, perfect and uniform in quality as Wonderful Soap.

Wonderful Soap

It whitens all clothes, no matter how dirty, and will not injure the most delicate fabrics.

Packed nicely, making it an attractive window or shelf display stock—and your profit is as the soap—always good.

Make Sure People Know You're Selling OXO CUBES

More people are taking up OXO every day. Your customers see it advertised in the papers. Their friends tell them how good it is, and how much it helps in preparing tasty meat dishes. Perhaps they try a drink of OXO at a restaurant.

Then they want OXO Cubes

Do they at once think of your store as the place to get them? Have you made such good use of the OXO signs and window cards that people just naturally come to you for their supply of OXO?

KNOX GELATINE

No. 1—Women who want "big moneysworth" buy KNOX GELATINE because each package makes two full quarts of jelly. No. 2—Women who want Quality and Purity buy KNOX GELATINE because it's finest and purest. No. 3—Grocers who believe in "giving customers whatever they want" sell KNOX GELATINE because our advertising makes so many want it. No. 4—Grocers who "push profitable products" push KNOX GELATINE because it's the most profitable. Think over the above four points and you'll find every one is a reason why you ought to PUSH KNOX GELATINE.

'For I want what I want when I want it"

How can you figure the sales YOU lose by not selling FIVE ROSES?

How big is the profit that day after day slips past your open door?

Only one way to judge of this, Brother Grocer.

—By watching your competitor's gain.

Every bag or barrel he sells of FIVE ROSES might have cashed YOU a profit.

And this is trade you can never seduce—

Since FIVE ROSES makes permanent patrons.

Every bag or barrel sold brings profit somewhere to a retailer.

Why not get it YOURSELF?

Every bag or barrel makes the next sale easy with its further profit.

And this is proved beyond a doubt by the really sensational increase in FIVE ROSES sales.

Just think, in 1888 there were only 800 barrels of FIVE ROSES sold in the world—now the Keewatin mills can make 10,500 barrels a day.

Which means only one thing, Brother Grocer—

Five Roses is packed to suit your trade in barrels and halves. Also in bags of 7, 14, 24, 49, and 98 lbs.

Daily capacity, 10,500 barrels.

Increased sales for the retailer, since we never sell direct.

It's the best-sold flour—why?

Because it's the best flour value for buyer and seller alike.

In the West homesteaders write us that they often go for miles out of their way to be sure of getting their bag of FIVE ROSES.

Think of the stores they drive past on the way—the lost sales.

Don't let customers cross the street. Sell FIVE ROSES.

Don't delay—to-morrow's profit can't make up for to-day's neglect.

SIMCOE BRAND BAKED BEANS

Are gilt-edged stock for high-grade grocers. They are much superior to those of the home cook, being as wholesome as they are delicious.

They make an excellent substitute for potatoes, so high in price at present throughout Ontario. Baked Beans contain as much nutriment in one tin as is in a pound of beefsteak.

Simcoe Brand Beans are one of the few lines of goods that has not advanced in price, notwithstanding that the beans themselves are very much higher.

Make Baked Beans your "special," and do your best to stir up enthusiasm. Your customers will appreciate the values, and you will appreciate the profits.

A Clean Soap Proposition

Mr. Grocer---

No doubt you were disgusted when you learned on Monday that the fair margin of profit you had been making on cake soap for the past fifteen months had been wiped out by a jug-handled reduction, bringing the retail price back to six cakes for twenty-five cents.

We have cut loose and are selling our Victor Soap at a straight price to all. No clap-trap, free box scheme about it. Do not allow some oily tongued traveller to load you up to the neck with cake soap, under the pretext that this free box scheme is but temporary. The price of cake soap is broken and likely to remain so for some time, if we have any say in the matter.

Don't worry, we can give you the cleanest business proposition of any line on the market. It shows you an honest profit, and at the same time every bar you sell of it means that your customer is getting by far the best value for her money, both as regards quality and quantity of soap.

If you are not already handling it, get in line at once. Write right off for our prices.

Auto Delivery Curtails Delivery Expenses

Service is one of the main features which determines a merchant's patronage, with delivery the most important part. Merchants are more and more beginning to realize the many points in favor of automobile delivery, because it brings them more business and because it is cheaper than any other method.

The Menard Commercial Car

has been designed to meet the demand, and is a quiet car of great reliability, reasonable speed, with a large reserve of power and a frame of strength and size capable of carrying a load of considerable bulk and up to 1500 lbs. weight.

The design of tires used on the Menard Commercial Cars reduces the cost of maintaining tires to a nominal sum. There are many other features of the Menard that will impress it upon merchants for its superiority above all others.

Ludella

The package tea question is getting to be serious for the retailer in so far as profit-making is concerned. Now we want to point out that we take particular care of the profit for you when handling the Ludella brand. Take for instance our lowest-priced package. We charge twenty-three cents per pound for what you sell at thirty cents, then there is the forty cent line for which we charge you twenty-eight cents and the fifty cent line for which you pay thirty-five cents.

Compare these costs with those of other brands and you will find that we look after your profits much better. This gives you an extra incentive to push Ludella tea, which, with the extra fine quality that is always placed inside the package, should make it a ready seller in your store. Always remember that, on any line that we put out, we always endeavour to safeguard the profit end of the transaction for you.

Hints on Increasing Sales in March

Good Prospects for Good Business in Fresh, Frozen and Canned Fish, Canned Fruits and Vegetables, Housecleaning Articles, Seeds, Dried Fruits, etc.—Early Attention to Plans for Displays and Advertising Will Result Profitably.

March is regarded as a fairly busy month and can be made to live well up to its reputation by the dealer who will put forth the required amount of energy. Conditions are such that to the live merchant excellent opportunities for the extension of business are offered in the coming month.

Possibilities During Lent.

We are now in the midst of the Lenten season and the dealer must cater to those who observe this season. Substitutes for meat, such as eggs, cheese, canned and fresh fish and similar lines will come in for a big demand, while the public may be interested in many other lines the demand for which increases during this season.

Get After Fish Trade.

Fresh, frozen, smoked and prepared fish of all kinds will be big sellers during the whole month.

The sale of fish should not be left entirely to the demand created by the season of Lent. The dealer and his clerks should use salesmanship to promote the largest volume of business possible. Everything possible should be brought into play that a record month's trade may be done in this department. There is going to be a big demand. See that you get your share of it.

A moderate amount of money used in advertising is always a good investment at this time. Point out the food values of fish and the fact that compared with some other lines, fish is really cheap.

Stock Proper Assortment.

Give attention to your assortment of fish, carrying more extensively those lines you think your customers will purchase readily. Frozen fish should be purchased in moderate quantities, especially as the weather becomes milder. Better to buy more often and in smaller quantities. Keep a fair supply of smoked, pickled and prepared fish, but guard against overloading. Stocks ought to be so limited that you will be able to clean them up at the end of the season without loss.

Canned Fish Another Seller.

Canned fish will be used extensively in the place of meat. A strong talking point in their sale is that they are always ready for use, and that it behooves the housewife to keep a supply in her pantry.

Salmon, herring, sardines, lobsters and smelts should all be given attention. Prepared soups will sell well, as also will cheese. The latter although high in price, has a high food value that should be mentioned to customers.

Homemade Preserves Getting Low.

The real heavy season of demand for canned goods opens in March. True, from early fall and during the winter there is an appreciable trade in these goods, but by the first of March conditions become such as to work for a much brisker call. The housewife's supply of preserves is becoming rather scanty and now is the time to bring jams and canned fruits to her notice, emphasizing their "goodness" and the fact that they are prepared from the best fruits in the most sanitary manner.

Vegetables are scarce and also high in price. This is the reason canned vegetables should move briskly from now on. Let it not be forgotten that it is the grocer who pushes these lines by window display, advertising and personal talks who will get the larger amount of trade.

Work Up Trade in Dried Fruits.

For the same reason that canned fruits will sell well, so will dried fruits. Fruits of some kind are necessary on the daily menu. Evaporated apples in view of the high prices for peaches and apricots will be in good demand, while prunes and figs are always in request.

The housewife finds difficulty at this time in securing material for pies. Here is an opportunity to suggest figs, which are sweet, appetising, a good food and comparatively cheap in price.

House-cleaning Time.

The latter part of March will find us on the threshold of Spring, and in order to reap the best results from this season, some careful beforehand planning is necessary. Spring suggests house-cleaning and for this semi-annual feature the grocer should prepare by fitting up his stocks of house-cleaning goods.

See to Wallpaper.

Those dealers who handle wallpaper will need to wheel this department into prominence and it is well to do this early. The advantages of an early start need no emphasis to the live dealer.

Arrange for Seed Display.

Spring also suggests seeds to the grocer and general merchant. Here again is another line greatly benefited by an early start. The public may be interested and considerable business done in this line long before the ground is ready to receive them. Being the first to interest a customer in this line means much for if the interest aroused is strong enough, it will in many cases mean future sales.

The grocer has plenty of opportunities at hand to make March a real live month and a record start on the Spring trade.

LONDON GROCERS WANT PROVINCIAL ASS'N

At Last Meeting Came Out Strongly in Favor and Have Committee to Confer with Other Associations—Garnishee Law, Scale Inspection and Co-operative Bill Need Attention—Paper on Account Collecting.

London, Ont., Feb. 22—(Special).—After considerable discussion on the proposal to form a provincial grocers' organization, the Retail Grocers' Association decided strongly in favor of the project.

It was felt that if such an association could only succeed in being the means of having a law passed whereby a man's wages could be garnisheed if $10 instead of $25, as at present, were due him; that if a change in the scale inspection law so that the government instead of the merchants would pay for inspection of scales, and also that if the Ontario Association could successfully fight the Co-operative Bill project, the provincial organization would be entirely justified. The members were enthusiastic over the proposal.

A committee consisting of President Norman McLeod, Treasurer Thos. Shaw, Vice-President Harry Ranahan, Secretary James McKenzie, John Diprose, H. Fountaine, G. B. Drake, J. McFarlane and E. J. Ryan were given power to co-operate with the Toronto, Hamilton and other associations in drafting plans of organization.

Collection of Bad Debts.

John Diprose read a paper on giving credit and collecting bad debts. W. T. Mullins gave the meeting some good pointers on the giving of credit, stating that when in doubt about the security of the person asking for credit, he gets the father, mother, and eldest daughter or son to sign an agreement to be responsible, if necessary, for the account.

SOAP ON THE DECLINE.

Much interest is centering around soap these days. A number of manufacturers have given out prices which while not exactly new, yet by reason of free offers practically mean a decline.

For instance, with five case lots at $4.15, there is offered a half-case free by some. Another makes it half-case free with five and a half cases; with 10 cases at $4.05 it is a case extra and with 25 cases at $4.05, there are offered three cases extra. There may be some differences from above, but the principle is made plain by this explanation.

These prices will likely bring back the six for a quarter selling method. In fact the grocers who attended the meeting of the Toronto Grocers' Association on Monday night agreed unanimously to reduce retail prices on the usual 5-cent article to six for a quarter. In the discussion many told of the department stores and nearby competitors cutting prices all along and taking soap sales away from them. It is considered by some that there is a probability of another adjustment as present prices do not allow the small dealer buying a single case to meet the six for a quarter price.

It is felt, therefore, that the decline announced will be made more clear cut. Whether this occurs or not retailers should get rid of laundry soaps as rapidly as possible. Soap windows announcing six for a quarter are now frequent in some centres.

Some at least of the soap ingredients are on the decline reducing to an extent cost of production and this is attributed in part to the new prices.

A PROVINCIAL ASSOCIATION.

There is every prospect of the organization in the no distant future of an Ontario Retail Grocers' Association.

The London Grocers' Association, which is one of the best in Canada, at its last meeting, came out strongly in favor of such a move. The Toronto grocers have done the same and the Hamilton and Brantford associations have given their assurance of support to the project.

With these four strong bodies united, there is every reason to believe that organization plans will soon be promulgated for a provincial association. There are many important matters that could be taken up by such a body. The London grocers, as will be seen from report of their meeting on another page, mention three—the Garnishee Law, Inspection of Scales, and the Co-operative Bill

It seems an injustice that a merchant cannot secure the payment of an account by garnishee if the debtor has not more than $25 coming to him. Workingmen to-day are usually paid weekly or fortnightly and scarcely ever does their employer owe them $25.

Inspection of scales whereby the dealer has to pay the costs is another apparently infamous regulation. These and many other questions need united effort on the part of retail grocers and an association that will go into to them carefully and present a strong front to our legislators should succeed.

TIMELY SERIES OF ARTICLES.

The series of articles on food legislation beginning in this issue, and written by W. S. Greening, will be an important one. Up to the present, Canada has not been blessed by a particularly strong food law, and in this respect we are somewhat behind Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. Greening, in his introductory article, has begun at the beginning. Future articles will deal with the progress and aims and objects of the laws existing in other countries and their application, finally leading up to conditions in Canada and what is proposed by the Government.

We commend these articles to the trade. In view of the near arrival of strict food standards in this country, they will be particularly well worth careful thought and study at this present time.

AMENDMENT TO ASSESSMENT ACT.

An act to amend the Ontario Assessment Act has been introduced into the Legislature. This is of a great deal of interest to retail dealers, and should be followed closely.

It refers to the rights of municipalities in determining how taxes shall be levied so far as land values, improvements and incomes are concerned. The chief section of the bill states that the council of a municipality, after the same has been submitted to and approved of by the ratepayers qualified to vote on money by-laws, may pass a by-law providing that land, real property and real estate shall be assessed at its actual value and that improvements and incomes shall be assessed at a percentage of their actual value. But the assessment of improvements and income shall not in the first year in which the by-law takes effect be reduced by more than forty per cent. of the assessment of the same for the next preceding year, and shall not in any year subsequent to the first year be reduced by more than fifteen per cent. of the assessment of the same for the next preceding year.

Whether this act, or one covering the principles involved, will go through is a question, as Premier Whitney, when he last expressed a view on the subject was pretty much against it. Retailers' views on such an act would be appreciated.

THE DESIRES OF THE PEOPLE.

That much of the high cost of living is due to the whims and desires of customers, was the statement made to the writer by a large manufacturer last week.

In a retail store recently, he witnessed a purchase of a small article which the buyer asked to have delivered as soon as possible. She lived a couple of miles away. The dealer, of course, had to give this delivery service which was costing him more than the profit on the article.

"There's one reason for the high cost of living," he remarked when the customer had departed. "Do you think I could live if I didn't get that delivery money back again?" he asked.

The consuming public is undoubtedly getting more and more particular. There are women in large cities known to have asked a merchant to send to their homes. a paper of pins or some other equally insignificant article.

All this must necessarily add to living expenses because merchants cannot be expected to maintain expensive delivery systems for nothing. If such very particular service is demanded—and it is in many cases from all classes of merchants—the buyer must pay for it.

There is a great deal of truth in the statement that the desires and whims of the people have much to do with the cost of living.

ONE REASON FOR HIGH BUTTER.

An influence that has much to do with the high price of butter is the general improvement in the quality. The fairly well-to-do consumer who finds poor butter on his table spreads it as thin as possible, but when it is good butter, he spreads it thick. He pays a higher price for good butter and uses more of it.

It is by a campaign of education that the public have learned to demand good butter. The grocer has been a big factor in this educative campaign. He would do well to extend it to other lines.

When a grocer educates his customer to use a better quality of goods, it, in probability, will mean larger sales, for as in the case of butter. the better the article, the greater the consumption.

High quality goods mean satisfied customers, a larger consumption and a better gross and net profit to the dealer. It pays to push high quality goods.

THE DANGER AND THE REMEDY.

Merchants are beginning to waken up to the fact that their future is being menaced by the parcels post agitation. They begin to realize that the danger is tangible and immediate. It is no mere chimera, a possible development in the distant future. On the contrary, it may make itself felt at any moment.

That members of the mercantile class are aware of the imminence of the danger is evidenced by letters received from various sections and the uneasy comments heard on all sides. It has been not evidenced so far by the taking of any definite steps to block the movement, however. This laxity is to be regretted. The danger is sufficiently great to warrant the voicing of an emphatic protest. Coming from so influential a class, the objections would carry due weight.

A retail dealer in a small western town writes to the MacLean Publishing Co. as follows:

"We see by the daily papers that a movement is on foot in Parliament to amend the laws re weight and cost of parcel post, making it immensely in favor of the mail order houses. . . . We trust you will use you great influence in your several papers to block the scheme and confer a lasting boon on the many thousand merchants throughout Canada."

The retail merchants can rest assured that everything an influential trade newspaper can do will be done by The Canadian Grocer and the other MacLean papers. At the same time, it must be borne in mind that prompt individual action on the part of the merchants themselves would suffice to nip the movement in the bud. If every retail dealer were to write his own representative in the Commons, nothing further would be heard of parcels post.

DISEASES DAMAGE PEACH TREES.

During the past week the daily press have printed despatches from the Niagara fruit district stating that fifty per cent. of the peach buds were destroyed during the winter by the extreme frost.

This is mere guesswork and not founded on any careful study of the situation. In fact it is much too early to express any opinion on the damage done to peach buds. The report, as one fruit grower stated, has come to be a "hardy perennial" with a section of the press and is not based on any scientific research.

In a winter like the present one when the cold has been steady, though extreme, fruit growers do not look for as much damage from frost as a mild winter with sudden cold dips. There is probably more ground for the damage reports this year than in an average season, but it is pure guesswork to say what per centage of the crop has been killed. This cannot be determined with any degree of accurateness until the trees come into blossom.

Apart from damage by frost, there is reason to believe that the peach crop will be comparatively short for some years owing to the fact that thousands of trees have been destroyed from the diseases known as "yellows" and "little peach."

History of Food Legislation Progress

First of Series of Articles on Evolution of Present Laws Existing—These Will Lead up to Canadian Food Standards and Show Necessity of Well-defined Legislation in This Country—Timely Topic in View of Federal Government's Intentions.

*By W. S. Greening.

National legislation regulating the manufacture and sale of food products is of comparatively recent origin, but local regulations on the subject are as old as history. It is only in the past forty years that any country has attempted to collect the scattered and in some cases contradictory local laws on the matter, and mold them into one coherent law to provide for uniform enforcement of its provisions.

Britain was the first country to initiate effective legislation of this kind in 1877. Her example was followed by every civilized country, so that to-day there is no part of the civilized world in which the manufacture and sale of food and drugs are not regulated by laws more or less efficient and well enforced.

The United States, which had lagged far behind Europe in this matter of protection for her consuming public, finally awoke to the importance of the matter, and in 1907 enacted a food and drugs act which is to-day the most far-reaching in its provisions, and has the best machinery for its enforcement in the world.

Early History of Food Legislation.

In this series of papers I will endeavor to trace the history of legislation on the subject, then compare the laws of the various countries, and finally point out some of the difficulties which must be met and overcome by any nation in its search for a perfect pure food law—one which will protect the public from fraud without injuring the interests of the manufacturer and distributor, and will do this without raising the cost of living, a danger not to be ignored in this day and generation.

It is a curious fact that ancient records show the customs of misbranding and fraudulent weight to have existed long before actual adulteration, as we know it, was at all common. True, Archimedes was the first analytical chemist, for all will remember the story of how he detected the base metal in King Hiero's crown by taking advantage of the known specific gravity of pure gold and comparing it with the metal in the crown. But we have no record of adulteration of food until quite late in the middle ages; whereas in the ancient Greek and Roman world we find numerous laws against misbranding, principally in the matter of substituting new wines for old, and sometimes in using the name of a district famous for the quality of its products to sell an article of inferior quality. This trade custom, which survives to the present day, as witness the words "Java" and "Mocha" coffee, "Durham Mustard"—certainly has the sanction of antiquity. Even in the time of Pliny, who lived in the first century of our era, we hear of the wines of inferior quality being branded "Falerno," the name of a district producing wines only of a fine quality. This custom dies hard, and has proved one of the hardest questions to solve by the modern law-maker.

Pure Goods Until Middle Ages.

Actual adulteration, by which we mean the mixing of a different or inferior quality with good and sound articles of food and doing it in such a manner as to deceive the purchaser, seems to have been almost unknown until well on into the middle ages. There were two good reasons for this. The first was that it was a matter of some skill to do it well enough to succeed in deceiving a critical purchaser. Secondly, the pure articles were really cheaper and more common than any known adulterant—alum in bread, for example, and chemicals in wines.

As civilization advanced, bringing with it a more complex life, it was found profitable to substitute inferior materials for sound. As the skill in deception increased with practice, we find two kinds of legislation enacted to cope with the growing evil. The local dealt with a great number of different abuses, but these were all dealt with by the same authorities, usually the officers of the various guilds. The national legislation concerned itself only with one article, but the law was uniformly enforced by the king's authority over the whole kingdom. The former mode was by far the most common and probably the most effective owing to the strength of the local government in the middle ages as contrasted with the weakness of a central authority.

Sale of Bread Regulated.

"An Assize of Bread" was proclaimed in England in the reign of John, apparently the one good act of his infamous reign. This Assize regulated the conditions of the manufacture and sale of bread as well as regulating the price at which it should be sold—the price changing with the rise and fall in value of corn. A law of this kind would be welcomed by modern housekeepers. It is an interesting example of the old adage of "nothing new under the sun," as this very question of price regulation by law is being agitated in the United States to-day in regard to the steel trade.

Evidently the time was not right for such revolutionary ideas as the law seems to have been very badly enforced enforced. It was revived in 1582. This time the question of price was left out, but stringent provisions were inserted against actual adulteration and the use of musty meal. The punishments for the offending bakers were characteristically severe. The first offence meant the pillory and a sound whipping. If the man continued to offend he was banished from the city and his property confiscated. This Assize also dealt with wines, beer and meat, and was not repealed until 1815.

Adulteration Affected Revenue.

Various adulterations, notably of tea, coffee and beer, were brought to the notice of the Houses of Parliament at different periods, but it is to be noted that the activities of the Government were only aroused where the question of adulteration was seriously affecting the revenues, the article in each case being those on which a heavy excise duty was collected, but where they took the matter in hand, they evidently meant to finish the evil at one blow.

The penalties were so heavy as to bring ruin on the unfortunate dealer who happened to be caught. Fines as high as $2,500 were to be imposed for a single offence. As is usual where the punishment far exceeds the gravity of the misdemeanor, these penalties were clearly not enforced. The practice had become so common that in 1855 the whole matter was made the subject of a parliamentary inquiry. This date may be taken as the beginning of modern food laws.

Early Testing of Beer.

It is evident from the above, that the question of regulating the food traffic had been left largely to the local authorities. How the different boroughs and municipalities carried out this task makes an interesting chapter in the history of the Middle Ages. Naturally the field is a wide one, and in an article of this

*Mr. Greening, the author of this important series, is vice-president of the Pure Gold Manufacturing Co. He will go into the question fully, explaining in future articles the scope of the British, United States and other pure food laws.

scope one can only touch lightly on a few isolated cases. Most of the enactments were directed against poisonous adulteration, in an effort to prevent at least the citizens from being poisoned, but in some cases we see attempts to save them from being cheated.

An instance of this was the office of "beer-tester"—an important, and we may judge, a much sought position in every town in England. His business was to see that the beer sold in the taverns was strictly up to standard, a matter of gravest concern in pre--prohibition times. The "beer-tester" would drop casually into a tavern, order a flagon of ale and then spill a little on his chair. Then sitting unostentatiously on the place where the ale was spilt, he would wait until the beer had dried. If his leathern breeches stuck to the seat, it showed the dishonest publican had been adding too much sweetening matter and he was promptly hauled before the justice of the peace.

Inferior Goods Dumped Into River.

In Nuremburg the punishment was similar to the old New England treatment of scolding wives, namely, the ducking stool. A characteristic form of trying a suspected offender was a kind of trial by ordeal. One unfortunate was forced to drink some of his own wine, from the effects of which he died—a remarkable example of making the punishment fit the crime. In nearly every case the adulterated goods were confiscated and burned in the town square by the public hangman, or dumped into the nearest river in the presence of the entire population, a holiday being proclaimed to celebrate the event. This would be a very popular idea to revive, and might be brought to the attention of our Canadian authorities.

On the whole, one gets the impression that the Middle Ages were really the good old days in this regard. Certainly our ancestors had little to fear from the adulteration of their food, which later became a very real danger to health and even to life. For this happy state of affairs they had to thank the great guilds, notably the pepperers, vintners, and later, the grocers. In these were vested an absolute monopoly of the trade in all articles of food, and they were scrupulously careful to keep their name unblemished from any whisper of bad merchandising. Violation of the guild rules meant expulsion from the order, a punishment so terrible in the Middle Ages as to deter the most unscrupulous and conscienceless offender.

Few Foods to Watch.

Then it must be remembered that the articles of food were surprisingly few in number when compared with the complex nature of our food supply. Meat and bread, beer and wine, comprised the entire list of common foods. Spices were so costly that only the great nobles could afford to use them, as they were worth their weight in gold. Tea, coffee and chocolate were unknown. Potatoes were only introduced into Europe in the seventeenth century. So the task of regulating trade in food products was not a difficult matter.

The decline of the guilds, co-inciding with the growth of the factory towns, marks the end of this golden age. Monopoly was replaced by the free competition of the Manchester school; whatever may be said of competition as a principle, there can be no question of its tendency in food manufacture. Even so great an advocate of unhampered competition as John Bright admitted that adulteration was the inevitable result.

Overcoming the Difficulties.

And so from the golden age of innocence we pass immediately to a period of about a hundred years in which every article of food and drink was grossly cheapened and adulterated. Conditions grew worse and worse until finally it became so great an evil that Parliament had to step in and give the matter its earnest attention and try in some way to bring order out of chaos. How this was done, how the difficulties were faced and overcome, will be the subject of my next paper.

CARNIVAL HELPED BUSINESS.

Lindsay Advancement Club Brings Many Visitors to the Town.

Lindsay, Ont., Feb. 22—(Special).—Lindsay as a town has never been known to boom spasmodically, but rather contents herself with a good steady growth. This to a large extent is due to the town's location. Situated in the heart of a rich argicultural district, the merchants benefit greatly by the business done with their farmer friends. Money makes the mare go, and the farmers have the money, because they are independent and conducting a lucrative business in their own unostentatious way.

The business men of Lindsay cater to the farmers, more or less, and merchants look well after the wants of their farmer friends. Besides the fall fair (a three-day event), there is held annually a poultry show (three days), a Christmas Fair, while a three-day Winter Carnival has just been completed, being a marvelous success.

The winter carnival idea was promulgated by a new organization in Lindsay known as the Lindsay Advancement Club, and the three days brought the farmers to town from a radius of 60 miles on all sides. Besides offering large attractions in the way of grand parades, bargain sales were put on. A "made in Lindsay" exhibition was also held during the three days, the rest of its kind ever held in Lindsay, and this was largely patronized. A hockey match was put on between two rival country teams, which also attracted large crowds. The local theatre managed to secure a three-day show with matinees. Cash prizes were given the farmers for the best team turnouts, the best single turnouts, etc., while cash prizes were given for the floats in the parades as well as the comic turnout. A tug-of-war was also held, and various other events, and the affair was a grand success from start to finish. Next year it will be bigger and better than ever. The streets and stores were also decorated, while the band was engaged for the three days, and cheap rates were allowed on the railroads.

A 19-CENT SALE.

Yarmouth, N .S., Feb. 22.—Yerxa's grocery recently had a "19c sale" which lasted for six days, and at which a variety of goods and certain quantities of goods were sold at 19 cents. In announcing the sale in the local paper they said: "We have finished taking stock and find we have too much stock; rather than carry the goods through the dull season, we have decided to hold a gigantic 19-cent sale. Remember satisfaction guaranteed. Your money back if you want it."

They quoted a long list of goods at 19c., the first five being "3 bottles Worcestershire sauce," "6 lbs. rolled oats," "5 lbs. good rice," "6 lbs. barley," "3 pkgs. jelly powder," etc.

EXPECTS HALF-POUND SALMON TINS.

St. John, N.B., Feb. 22.—Local grocers are greatly interested at present time in canned salmon. The outlook is for prices to be much advanced in all varieties owing to the increased consumption. Speaking with your correspondent this week, the manager of a local wholesale house said that he looked forward to the time with confidence when half-pound tins of salmon would be placed on the market, just as had been done with lobsters. He did not think it would be very long.

Already, he said, salmon was being shipped in this way from some of the canneries, and it was already becoming a luxury for the average worker, so much so that the larger sized tins could not compete favorably as regards sales, with the smaller cans, should the latter be placed on the market, for these would do very well for the purpose often intended, namely, salads and the like.

GROCERS' LETTER BOX.

(See also page 46.)

Editor Canadian Grocer,—Will you kindly let me know through your Grocers' Letter Box, how shrimps or prongs are cooked or prepared for the table.

READER.

Editorial Note.—Shrimps are very often eaten raw after shell is removed, or made into salads. Nearly all the shrimps coming into Canada are pickled in such a way as to allow of this being done.

Law's Grocers' Manual gives the following advice on how to boil shrimps:—Put about four ounces of salt into one gallon of water, and when the latter boils have the fish placed in readiness, in a wire frying basket and plunge them in at once. Boil quickly from 5 to 7 minutes, according to size, but take care that they are neither over or under done. When done enough (that is, as a rule, when they change color), take up the fish, shake them gently in the basket until they are thoroughly drained, then spread them out to cool and use as required.

Seeded and Seedless Oranges.

Editor, Canadian Grocer:—Will you explain the difference between seeded and seedless raisins? Do the latter grow without seeds?

BEGINNER.

Ottawa, Ont.

Editorial Note.—"Beginner" is quite correct. Seedless raisins grow without seeds just as our seedless oranges do. They are generally smaller than those containing seeds.

Seeded raisins on the other hand are those which originally contained seeds but have as the name denotes been "seeded," or relieved of their seeds. They come in packages.

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Molasses—Demand increasing.

Rice—Lower prices for future delivery.

Montreal, Feb. 22.—With a steady seasonable trade prevailing the market in general remains unchanged. Business in most lines is brisk, notwithstanding high quotations.

The sugar situation is again interesting, stocks are small and the prices tend to advance.

The Lenten season has increased the molasses demand, and before long an advance in price may take place. This can also be accounted for by the high price of sugar.

SUGAR.—Sugar at present offers a strong tone. The demand is good notwithstanding high quotations and small stocks. Prices advanced twice in New York during the week, so local dealers are expecting an increase. The market shows upward tendencies.

TEAS.—No change has taken place in market. The demand is good, notwithstanding high prices and no tendencies towards a decline are perceptible.

The market is stronger than it was this time last year. Indian teas show a shortage and are likely to advance.

CANNED GOODS.

TORONTO.—Retailers who didn't buy all the canned goods they wanted are now in the market, and wholesalers report fairly good sales. There is a good call for tomatoes with prices high. Retailers should endeavor to push fruits from now on as many housewives will not have much on hand of their own make by this time.

Salmon will be a good seller during Lent even if the price is high.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advance looked for.

Prunes—Higher market.

Rice—Lower prices future delivery.

Soap—Practically a decline.

Evaps.—Higher market expected.

Beans—Stronger.

Toronto, Feb. 22.—Trade is getting better after the usual comparative quietness of past six weeks. Wholesalers are fairly well pleased with the volume of business and collections.

Many of the markets present interesting features. Sugar looks like moving upward again on account of strong statistical position. Some soap manufacturers have practically reduced prices by giving about a ½ case, case and 3 cases with 5, 10 and 25 case orders. Different firms have slightly different arrangements in this regard.

Rice orders for delivery on March 15 and May 1 are being taken at lower prices. Prunes, beans and evaps. all show stronger tones.

SUGAR.—It was expected that sugar would have advanced before time of going to press but did not. The situation is strong and the future of the market rests with final output in Cuba . The rainy season is approaching, in fact it is present in some places and interrupting grinding causing a loss of time in making the crop but on the other hand improving the spring cane. The total output of crop is therefore still problematical. The world's visible supply shows a decrease of over 695,000 tons in comparison to year ago, thus demonstrating the market's strength.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.—These commodities are moving fairly well. This is a good maple syrup season and retailers are turning this syrup into money rapidly. Molasses, as a stock food, has been increasing in popularity and more of a feature should be made of it. Fruit is scarce and this has tendency to increase sales of both syrup and molasses.

DRIED FRUITS.—Some wholesalers are finding good retail demand during past week for evaporated peaches and apricots. One said he sold more of these during the week than for two or three months past. In most cases dried fruits are stiffening in price. Prunes are marked up from 70's to 80's upwards. They are scarce. Wholesalers note firmness in Bosnia prunes, many of which are sold on this market. A couple of carloads on the way were sold to the wholesale trade at fairly high figures. The raisin market is in most cases quiet. They seem to be getting harder to get than ever. For the time being an easy feeling has developed in currant market due to the season, but statistical position is strong and there will be no lasting slump. Evaporated apples are scarce and getting into small compass, but good inferior stock.

TEA.—This market still holds its firmness. There was less Indian tea offered on the London market in January this year than in 1911, but more Ceylon. The average price of the former was a little higher this year while that of Ceylon was same price. On the London market it is generally anticipated that from now on buying will be particularly strong on part of big retail houses, and it is therefore believed by some that prices of common tea will revert to high level of values of last year.

COFFEE.—The coffee market is a difficult one to fathom. There is evidently much speculation going on in New York with the Arbuckles in the lead and it is impossible to guess what will happen coffee two or three days ahead. Market is not depending on supply and demand so that local coffee buyers are purchasing on the hand to mouth basis awaiting a break some time.

Winnipeg, Feb. 22.—Firmness on the entire market may be said to be predominating feature of the trade this week. With the extreme mild weather which prevailed during the greater part of the week, the trade seems to have become excited and as a result orders during the week have been heavier than was anticipated. The mild weather interfered seriously with the annual bonspiel, the play during the last few days taking place in many instances on watery and sticky ice. Visitors to the city were more numerous than ever during this period, and as one wholesaler explains, "Personally I have been doing nothing but entertaining customers and guests from the towns and various cities of the West, but the firm has been busier than ever during the week."

An unexpected rush has been prevailing with the mild weather, and prospects are becoming brighter every day. With this advance in trade, the strength of the market has been keeping pace and this week we have noted further advances in sugar and prunes. Valencia raisins are also moving upward and we look for an advance shortly in evaporated apples. Trade has been so brisk that stocks in city are becoming demoralized and several lines are practically off the market as new supplies cannot be obtained from the east. Among these are syrup and molasses, pearl barley and split peas.

SUGAR.—As stated above, a further advance took place during the week of 10 cents per cwt. in British Columbia granulated sugar. The market has been steady since last week's sharp rise, and it would appear as if this advance was due entirely to this strength. Stocks in the city are not large as jobbers and wholesalers only carry enough to comfortably supply the trade. Prices quoted below are for Montreal sugar. B. C. figures will be ten cents per hundred pounds higher.

SYRUP and MOLASSES.—The report was started during the week by one firm that stocks of syrup in the city were decidedly on small side and that further supplies could not be secured. The market has been steady and strong for the last few weeks, and it would not be surprising if advances in this line were in order. As yet no change has taken place, but the tendency is for higher figures.

DRIED FRUITS.—Prunes and Valencia raisins continue to form the sensation of the trade by continuing to rise. The former took an upward climb of half a cent per pound during the earlier part of the week and the latter an advance of twenty cents per box. Prices existing now in these lines are regarded as being stiff, and should they continue to rise they will be beyond the reach of the average customer. These advances, however, are not unexpected and have been predicted time and again in these columns.

EVAPORATED APPLES.—The situation in this line shows little difference from other lines of the trade. Stocks in city are not as large as many would like and reports of the dwindling of eastern supplies are being received. As a result prices have been holding firm and last week one firm advanced their figures from 10½ to 11 cents per pound, flat, Winnipeg. Other houses are still quoting 10 to 10½ cents flat, Winnipeg, but one of these houses pointed out emphatically that if they were charging what they should according to condition of the market 10½ to 11 cents would be prevailing price. It was also stated that an advance was looked for shortly. The demand still holds strong and a slight advance is not expected to interfere with the trade very much.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

St. John, Feb. 22.—Strong markets prevail in many lines at present and there is tendency to firmness in almost all of more common commodities of life. Provisions in general are steady and it is opinion of local dealers that flour will be higher before much time has elapsed. There has been no change during the past week. Rolled oats are decidedly firm, also, and show an inclination if anything to be higher.

Much interest still is shown in sugar market and local grocers are of the belief that prices of last year may be seen again.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Halifax, Feb. 27.—Another advance in price of sugar was chief feature of local grocery market this week. The advance is due to condition of raw sugar market. Extra standard granulated is now quoted at $5.75, United Empire at $5.65, bright yellow is $5.60, No. 1 yellow $5.25, and unbranded $5.10. Some dealers expect that price will go still higher.

Cable advices received here from Barbados state that the molasses market is firm and expectation is that prices will likely be higher. Fancy Barbados in puncheons is selling here at 36 cents per gallon.

Rolled oats are higher, they having again been advanced twenty-five cents per barrel. The price quoted is $5.50 to $5.75 per barrel, and in bags, $2.75.

ANNUAL STAFF GATHERINGS.

The seventh annual conference of the General Sales Agents of the Shredded Wheat Co., was held in Niagara Falls, N.Y., last week. At this conference the sales agents take a recapitulation of the past year's work and discuss the future. It was wound up on Thursday night by the annual banquet. John Hewitt, Toronto, was among the sales agents present.

High Prices from Short Grapefruit Crops

Off Season in Florida Brings Down Production—Lemon Market Firming Somewhat—Cranberries and Marmalade Oranges Waning—Freer Arrivals of Potatoes but Market Will Remain Firm—Parsnips and Cabbage Scarce.

Grapefruit presents some features of interest as it will be high in price this season. Florida stock is scarce because of light crop, the estimate being from 40 to 50 per cent. normal. Jamaicas have gone up in sympathy. Grapefruit generally is almost half as high again as at this time year ago. The Cuban crop is just beginning to move, but it doesn't cut much of a figure in the market.

Lemons, too, are firm. On account of the frost in California the United States markets have been strong and the outlook is for a fairly short crop of Verdelli from Italy and Sicily. The anticipation of this early spring shortage induces many to purchase ahead so far as the keeping qualities of lemons will allow and this results in firmer situation. A foreign cable to a Toronto broker during the week announced an excited market which is now about a shilling higher than a year ago. There are no prospects in sight for a decline.

Cranberries are practically off the market and marmalade oranges won't be long. The season for these oranges was a particularly good one. More were sold than a year ago, and at higher prices.

Florida strawberries are selling as the price of 65 to 75 cents will allow. They will not be a great deal cheaper until points of production are further north.

Since a week ago potato deliveries have been freer, due in part to farmers opening winter pits and arrival of a few carloads of Irish stock. The situation is still strong and there are no immediate prospects of a declining market. The potato shortage in Quebec and Ontario is real and appreciable and has much to do with present prices.

Parsnips are scarce and going up, while cabbage is something some wholesalers cannot secure at all.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS.—Green fruits are still active and tend to bring forth many developments. The market in general shows signs of further increase in price owing to the shortage of stock.

Florida grapefruit range from $3.50 to $7 per box and are scarce and wanting.

Lemons have advanced considerably during the week.

Onions are becoming scarce and the prices will undoubtedly advance.

FRUITS.—Several price changes are noted since week ago. Messina lemons have been marked up and the lemon market has tendency to firmness. Marmalade oranges are also higher. While they are going off the market, yet two or three carloads are, at time of writing, on the way. There are not many Mexican oranges selling now. Floridas are about the best eating oranges now but people seem to have a particular liking for the seedless. Grapefruit is advancing in price. Crop in Florida is estimated at only about forty per cent. or at most half a normal crop. Prices are up this week 50 cents case. There are plenty of cheap apples on the market at $1.50 to $2.50, but No. 1 choice are ruling at $4 and even higher. The latter are not so plentiful. Strawberries are still coming in from Florida but are ruling high. It will be a few weeks before we get them from points farther north.

VEGETABLES.—There is good trade in most vegetables. Potatoes for some time have held an important place and although this is still maintained yet excitement is subsiding. Supplies are coming more freely as many farmers are opening up pits and shipping surplus stock. Potatoes, however, will likely remain fairly firm till new stock arrives. Parsnips are scarce and higher. Green onions and radish are easing off as supplies increase. Cabbage is scarce, some firms having none at all. Duty on cabbage is 30 per cent. This week we have Florida celery added to the California article. The first car of Florida came in Tuesday. Canadian onions are getting scarce.

Causes for High Prices in Potatoes

Failure of Crops in Quebec and Ontario one of Chief Reasons—Many Farmers Not Growing as Many as Usual—United States in Same Straits—Potatoes Being Imported from Europe.

Montreal, Feb. 22—(Special).—While we have seldom very much to report about potatoes, yet we could devote quite an amount of space to this food staple at the present time, as farmer, retailers and consumer hardly know what level prices will reach owing to the great scarcity. A few remarks will probably throw some light on and help to explain the situation.

Prices in the Past.

Fifteen or sixteen years ago potatoes could be had for as small a sum as 40c per bag and ever since its introduction to the dinner table by Sir Walter Raleigh, the consumer has been taking the potato as a matter of course.

It has become more and more valuable in every respect of the word, but its popularity as an article of diet has never been properly noticed until a scarcity arises as at present, when people will feel lucky if they can secure a bag at $2 instead of the more regular $2.10 quotation.

Comparison With Last Year.

Last year during February our records show that the price per bag was $1.25 to $1.40, and the low figure, 85c, was also reached. Why then is there an advance of about 50 per cent? Why should Messrs. Potato & Co. hold up the housewife?

The fact is that all over the Dominion except in New Brunswick and the middle and far west (Manitoba to British Columbia), the potato crop was a failure. This winter alone there is an estimated shortage of about 17,000,000 bags in Ontario and Quebec, and the deficiency has of course to be supplied by outside sources.

Not Planting as Many.

Another cause which some are not inclined to consider, may be attributed to the suffering of a number of farmers from "megalowmania,"—a malady which is making a number of growers think too much of their time and labor. In short they have more advanced ideas than their fathers and think that the prices for the last few seasons were too low, with the result that they did not plant the same amount of seed last spring. But if these prices were taken and set beside the cost of production it would be found that things were entirely favorable for the potato grower.

It must, of course, be remembered that the long spell of hot dry weather killed quite an amount of the seed planted, with the result that many farmers will have to purchase seed themselves, a fact which might be closely considered by the general dealer who is just beginning to see to his stocks of seeds in general.

In New Brunswick and Manitoba the housewife can get her bag of "Murphies" for 90c or $1, but when the warmer weather arrives the stocks in the West will begin to move east and an increase will then be noticeable.

Standards for Fruits and Vegetables

Amendment to Inspection and Sale Act Include Many Weight and Measure Standards but says Nothing of Apples—Bag of Potatoes to be 80 Pounds—Fruit Growers Adopt Barrel Standard for Apples.

Editor Canadian Grocer.—Will you please inform me whether there is a standard weight for a peck of apples. If so what is it and who fixed the standard ?

B. L.

Waterloo, Ont.

There does not appear to be any Dominion standard weight for apples. In last week's issue reference was made to some amendments to the Inspection and Sale Act introduced into the Commons by Hon. Geo. E. Foster. While this new act refers to standards for bushels and bags of various fruits and vegetables, no mention is made of apples.

Pounds to the Bushel.

While on this subject it will be interesting to the trade to go more deeply into the standards proposed.

In the new act is a clause reading as follows :

> A bushel of any article mentioned in this subsection shall mean, unless a bushel by measure is specially agreed upon, that number of Dominion standard pounds of such article which is shown in this subsection opposite the name of such article, namely :—

Artichokes	56 pounds
Beans	60 "
Beets	50 "
Blue grass seed	14 "
Carrots	50 "
Castor beans	40 "
Clover seed	60 "
Hemp seed	44 "
Onions	50 "
Parsnips	45 "
Potatoes	60 "
Timothy seed	48 "
Turnips	50 "

Potato Bag Standard.

Mush discussion has been made on the proposed weight standard for a bag of potatoes. As has been previously announced in The Grocer this will be fixed at 80 lbs. The clause relating to this and other bag standards in the new Act reads as follows:—

> "A bag of any article mentioned in this sub-section shall mean, unless a bag by measure is specially agreed upon, that number of Dominion standard pounds of such article which is shown in this sub-section opposite the name of such article, namely:—

Artichokes	75 pounds
Beets	70 "
Carrots	70 "
Onions	75 "
Parsnips	60 "
Potatoes	80 "
Turnips	70 "

A barrel of potatoes will be standardized at 165 pounds.

Barrel Standard for Apples.

The question of a standard barrel for apples, so far as measure is concerned, was discussed last week at the annual conference of Dominion fruit growers at Ottawa. Two standards were adopted. One is the ninety-six quart (12-peck) size common to Nova Scotia, and the other the 112-quart (14-peck) size common in Ontario and other parts of the country.

Tariff on Pears.

The fruit growers asked for an increase of tariff on pears coming into Canada, but Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, pointed out that the tariff commission recently appointed would have to take up all such questions.

Still Complain of Railway Congestion

Millers Behind in Shipments—Some Have December Orders Yet Not Delivered—Flour and Cereals Show Little Change from Week Ago—Argentine Wheat Moving After Strike.

Flour and cereals have practically remained motionless from last week. The advance in rolled oats announced a week ago has evidently not been conducive to large retail demand, as cereal manufacturers say trade is rather slow. No doubt many, anticipating the advance, bought prior to the rise.

Flour exports are represented as not active and railways have been slow in moving stock. The strike of railway employes in Argentine is now over and shipments from that country to Europe will increase from now on. This will assist in producing an easier feeling to our market. While the sending in bond of Canadian wheat into the United States helped to relieve the congestion it does not affect prices. There is undoubtedly an easier feeling in wheat. A decline occurred on the Chicago market during the week.

Cereal manufacturers continue to complain of delayed shipments. All are behind on account of the railway congestion and some haven't December shipments in buyers' hands yet.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—Flour has been featureless throughout the week. The demand is normal and can be met without difficulty. Prices remain the same and are likely to maintain this attitude for some time.

TORONTO.

FLOUR.—There are few important conditions in flour market. There is a better delivery of Ontario wheat, but Manitoba is still slow. Ontario wheat is quoted at 95 to 96 in cars on the local market, with the tendency towards weaker feeling. Manitoba No. 1 Northern is quoted at $1.13.

CEREALS.—No change since last week's advance has occurred in cereal market. Cereals are not moving very rapidly. The oat market is strong particularly on account of delay through railway congestion. One dealer stated he has some December shipments not yet delivered.

MONEY IN HONEY.

A Toronto wholesale commission house paid an Ontario beekeeper about $4,000 for a carload of honey which was shipped out west. This represented but one season's harvest which was reaped by the bee farmer and one son. The carload contained about 40,000 pounds. There is surely money in raising honey.

Lent Here With a Scarcity in Fish

High Prices Prevailing and Tendency is Towards Higher in Smoked, Pickled, Prepared, etc.—Good Retail Demand Foretells Large Sales—Fishing Fairly Good at Present in East—Use of Steam Trawler Questioned.

Lent is here and fish markets are firm and will rule generally from firm to higher. Wholesale dealers are finding a shortage and during past week have advanced a number of lines.

That the prices prevailing will ease off demand to certain extent is admitted by all, yet in spite of this presence of Lenten season will mean good sales.

On the Atlantic coast fishing has been progressing favorably of late on account of fine weather and supplies of fresh caught stock have been fair. But all lines caught last year such as salted, pickled and prepared are scarce and we may look for other advances.

A matter which is being discussed with interest among New Brunswick fish men at present is as to whether or not the advent of the steam trawler into local waters would have a tendnecy to injure the supply on the local markets. There are some who uphold the idea that the trawler is welcome to the local waters while others maintain that it is a source of injury and a cause of menace to the industry. The discussion is interesting and animated.

NOVA SCOTIA.

HALIFAX.—There was an excellent demand in the local market this week for dried fish. Grocery dealers are stocking up with salt cod, in preparation for Lenten season. The salt cod now on market is of excellent quality, some very choice fish being sent out to dealers.

A sale of bank codfish about a month ago rather disarranged the trade's ideas, this cargo having been placed at a decline of twenty-five cents less than previous sales. It was thought that a slump in the prices might follow, but this has not taken place, and prices at present remain firm.

Export trade has remained the same as is always case during season of high prices, but a steady trade in small lots has been going on and if this continues, by May first stocks on hand will be extremely small.

Only small quantity of salt mackerel remain on market and these are held for higher prices. There is a small stock of alewives but price limits consumption. Pickled salmon are also going slowly. Fat herring have been in demand of late, and from now on the trade in this class of fish will be brisk.

Prices on the local market rule about as follows:—

Bank cod, per quintal	7 00
Haddock, per quintal	5 00
Hake, per quintal	4 50
Pollock, per quintal	4 75
Mackerel, (large 3's) per bbl.	13 00
Alewives, per bbl.	6 75
Salmon, per bbl.	13 00
Fat herring (full bbls.) per bbl.	4 50
Fat herring (half bbls.) per bbl.	2 40

QUEBEC.

MONTREAL.—With Lenten season at hand dealers find themselves in the centre of great excitement. Business as is customary at this season is active, and the demand for all varieties extremely heavy.

Supplies at present continue to meet the call without trouble; but will evidently offer shortage as season progresses.

Prices have advanced in some varieties and will surely increase if market offers a shortage of stocks.

ONTARIO.

TORONTO.—The fish market is full of interest this week on account of sharp firming up of most lines. While Lent has opened this is not the whole cause. Fish is scarce in all lines and while in only a few cases can we quote actual advances to the trade yet it is expected more will follow. Frozen, smoked, pickled and prepared are all comparatively short. These, of course, depend on last season's catches. There is a probability that present prices will have tendency to curtail demand but this will be overcome by Lenten sales. Even at prices quoted fish is fairly cheap food compared to some others. Since last week red salmon, fresh trout, fillets of haddie and Labrador herring have all shown advances.

An Ontario Grocers' Association Likely

London, Hamilton, Brantford and Toronto Associations to Confer Regarding this Step—Retailers Anticipate Soap Decline —Are Going to Sell Six for a Quarter—Want Small Debt Court —Wholesalers Selling to Consumers—A Presentation.

(Staff correspondence.)

Toronto, Feb. 22.—A provincial grocers' association, the high cost of living, high price of butter, prospective decline in soap prices, wholesalers selling to consumers and margins of profits were among the important questions raised for discussion at the regular meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association on Monday night. The meeting was largely attended, every available seat being utilized—and then there was one short. Bailey Snow used the one that wasn't there.

One of the pleasing features of the meeting was the presentation of a handsome couch made by the association to the past-president, W. C. Miller. D. W. Clark made the presentation referring to Mr. Miller's successful occupancy of the 1911 president's chair in complimentary terms. The recipient in his reply touched upon a very important point when he said that prior to his becoming a member he had a certain feeling of distrust towards competitors which had all been removed since. This is one of the strong benefits of association work.

President R. W. Davies presided for the first time and kept the members talking business.

A Provincial Association.

Secretary C. F. Thorne read communications from the secretaries of the London and Hamilton associations, J. A. McKenzie and M. R. Hill respectively, regarding the formation of a provincial grocers' association. These associations as well as Brantford and Toronto are strong for the Ontario organization, and it looks as if it will be a reality.

The Toronto members who will be a committee to go into this question with representatives of the other associations are, President R. W. Davies, Vice-president D. W. Clark, and Past President W. C. Miller. Invitations are sent to the other associations for the grocers' banquet at the Arlington Hotel next week.

Small Debt Court.

D. W. Bell and W. C. Miller reported an interview with Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General for Ontario, regarding a court for collection of small debts. At present time the expensive division court method has to be used and a man's wages cannot be garnisheed unless he has $25 coming to him.

Hon. Mr. Foy suggested a small committee of two or three to place the views of the association before him when they would be given consideration.

High Cost of Living.

Attention was called to the unfairness of a portion of the daily press in accusing the retailer of being the cause of the high cost of living. "We should do something," said David Bell, "to put them right. For instance, I'm selling butter at 40 cents, at an advance of 5 cents. We should let the public know that our profits are not excessive." In this case the profit would be only 12½ per cent—not equal to cost of doing business.

"A charitable institution," was what W. C. Miller termed the retail grocer of to-day. Dealers were carrying hundreds of accounts, many of which were not collectable.

Neil Carmichael suggested co-operation in advertising to clear the retailer. This should be done collectively and in such a manner as to convince the public. Present high prices were due to production arising out of the hot season of last year. D. W. Clark also advised using the press.

With regard to butter, C. Fry stated that it wasn't produced in sufficient quantities by the farmers. They didn't have the feed for the cows necessary to produce butter.

Bailey Snow pointed to the thousands of gallons of cream being used every day for ice cream, which in the past didn't form much of a feature. J. S. Bond said that the cost of manufacturing butter, the raising of the stock, and higher wages to employes had much to do with the price.

Will There Be Soap Decline?

The present prices of soap and the prices offered by large departmental stores were the subject of much discussion. Some of the members considered manufacturers would soon lower prices on account of decline in cost of raw materials as they understood it. As many retailers bought 25-case lots at the old figure they consider it good business to get rid of this stock.

The association therefore decided unanimously by a standing vote to drop the 5-cent straight price on the 5-cent laundry soaps and sell henceforth 6 bars for a quarter.

Dealers told of competitors a short distance away from them who had been selling 6 for a quarter all along. The tip on prospects of a decline was appreciated by those with plenty on hand.

Wholesalers Selling Direct.

Mention was made of a report in The Grocer of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild convention where a wholesaler was defined with regards to his right to become a member. No wholesaler interested in any retail business could join. "But yet," said one member, "they are selling to hotels and restaurants whose trade justly belongs to us."

"Why, the other day," remarked another, "a wholesaler sent up a hundred of sugar by his driver to an individual two doors from me. The man wasn't at home so the driver came in to use my phone to find out what he should do."

A traveller said to one member that his instructions were to get after all large accounts of $100 a month or over.

Small Margin of Profit.

"Now that the wholesalers are cutting out discounts, it's pretty nearly up to us to sell for cash only," was another expression of opinion.

"We shouldn't buy goods for a dollar that sell at 10 cents, nor should we pay $1.50 for a 15-cent article, or $2 for a 20-cent article," he added, and the others agreed.

Among the new members proposed were: F. W. Brown, Carlton street; G. L. Dean, Harbord street; W. Mason, Queen street, east, and J. Butcher, Peter street.

The annual banquet of the association will be held next Wednesday evening at the Arlington, when in addition to the dinner, addresses of benefit to the trade will be given.

The association is looking for a bigger hall.

Lard Selling Well in View of High Butter

Prices of Butter Still Firmer—New Zealand Imports Reach Montreal and Toronto to Relieve Situation—No Relief Until New Cows Bring it—Warning to Country Merchants—Eggs on the Decline—Will Not Be Higher for Some Time—Ham and Backs Selling Well.

Lard is probably the one pork product moving with any great degree of rapidity. This is due to the high ruling butter prices and is likely to last until the back of these high prices are broken. Hams and backs are selling fairly well. Retail dealers in many cases are getting behind these products and with window and counter displays are increasing their sales. On the whole the provision market is not particularly active but steady in comparison to a week ago.

Butter is creating a mild sensation among the wholesale and retail trade with its ascensions. Wholesale commission men in Toronto have had to add another cent to retail trade and there seems to be no relief until the new cows a month hence provide it. Production is so well compared with demand that every pound of Canadian butter sold strengthens the situation to some extent. A large Montreal and Toronto firm has imported New Zealand butter, via England—as referred to in last week's issue—to relieve the tension. There were about 300,000 packages or six carloads in the cargo, one carload of which has come through to Toronto, the remainder staying in the east. The world-wide drought last summer is chief cause for shortage. Not so much was put in storage and farmers knowing that feed would be scarce during winter did not give usual attention to butter. Many in fact allowed their milk cows to feed from the straw stacks.

Country general dealers should, however, move with some care in purchasing butter. A Toronto commission man showed The Grocer a letter from a dairyman refusing his (the commission man's) price for dairy butter, stating that the local merchants were paying 36 cents. It is just a question whether those merchants will get their money back. It is possible we may see other importations besides those from New Zealand, and while the market cannot drop for some time the strong tension will be relieved in such cases. Paying 36 cents for dairy butter is a little risky.

We may look from now on for regular drops in eggs. While consumption is rapidly increasing production is lively and in spite of extra Lenten demand prices will ease off. This week they are from 4 to 6 cents below last week's figures. Last year at this time wholesale merchants had considerable stocks of eggs in cold storage and lost money in them, whereas this year there are few if any. Most were sold out two weeks ago and others a month. This has had a tendency to keep up price of new laids. Nothing now—except 20 below zero weather, which is not likely—will prevent hens from doing their best. Lower prices are to be expected. United States importations are assisting.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—A fairly good trade continues to be done in hams, bacon and lard, there being a steady demand from local and country buyers for supplies. The market is moderately active with no noted change in prices.

The call for pork is good at repeated quotations:

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS.—Of the pork products those showing most activity these days are lard, hams and backs. Lard is moving rather freely because of high price of butter and the usual good retail demand exists for hams and backs. BUTTER.—Butter situation is interesting. Prices are a little firmer from week ago, majority of commission men putting them up a cent all around. One local firm brought in carload this week of fine New Zealand grass butter which will sell at about 35c to retail trade. For best fresh creamery prints, wholesale men are getting as high as 38c., retailers selling this at 44 and 45 cents. Butter is undoubtedly scarce and likely to be scarce and high for at least a month when new cows will bring some relief. There is little coming in and every pound sold makes the situation so much worse. Farmers are selling to general merchants in the country for more than commission men can pay.

EGGS.—From now on for some time retailers may look for cheaper eggs. They will gradually decline from week to week in view of the rather heavy supplies coming in. For two weeks and in some cases more there have been no storage or pickled eggs on this market which of course had effect of keeping up new laids. This time last year there was plenty of storage stock. While Lent will result in greater eggs consumption yet there is little or no prospect of this having any appreciable effect on the coming down on prices. Hens are laying, and it will take some severe weather to stop them. Dealers should, therefore, be prepared for gradual weekly declines. Prices are down about 4 cents from last week. Consumption apart from Lent will be great because once the human tongue gets a taste of new spring egg it craves for more.

CHEESE. — Cheese is undoubtedly scarce. Stocks are in small compass and while there is actually no quotable change the situation is firm and advances would not be surprising. Reasons for scarcity have been previously given in this column.

POULTRY.—There is not a great deal doing in poultry these days. Those wholesale firms specialising in poultry are getting in fair quantities every day from their own buyers, while general country merchants are forwarding stray lots. Country merchants would do well to consider the week-end demand for poultry and get their birds into the large centres not later than Friday. Many purchases are made Friday, and Saturday for Sunday dinner and prices usually are better towards end of week. They should be sure they do not arrive Saturday—that is too late.

Where Competition Meant More Business

Grocer Established Provision Department Between Two Exclusive Provision Stores—These Stores Attracted Custom to that District and he Reached Out for Share—Installed Meat Slicer, Refrigerator and Marble Top Counter—Special Salesman in Charge.

Some grocers are afraid to specialize on provisions because of nearby competition from exclusive produce and provision stores. "What's the use of me putting in a special counter and refrigerator when So-and-So at the corner retails nothing else or Blank up two blocks manufactures the goods he sells?" is sometimes heard as an excuse.

Progressive dealers will, however, ignore such competition; rather they will take advantage of it, as did a certain grocer known to the writer.

Had Competition on Both Sides.

He was situated between two exclusive provision stores—stores which sold scarcely anything but pork products, dairy products and a few canned goods. They were stores operated by pork product manufacturers, and therefore meant considerable competition.

This did not in any way daunt the dealer. He calculated that these two stores would bring people to that particular district for ham, bacon, lard, etc. While there it was up to him to get a portion of their trade.

Established a Separate Counter.

To do this he installed a marble top provision counter, a large display refrigerator, computing scales, a meat slicer and made one clerk responsible for the provision department.

It soon developed that this man had to give all his attention to it. He not only secured trade because of the fact that people were attracted to that district, but because many who came for groceries alone, bought bacon, ham, etc., because of the special attention given these goods.

There is no reason why every grocer cannot make some special efforts to push the sales of these goods. Canadian pork products are of a particularly high quality and with modern systems for handling, they can be sold easily and at a good profit.

While groceries assist in bringing provision trade, the opposite is true. If a store bears a reputation for good bacon, ham, eggs, butter and lard it will get new customers for those goods who will eventually purchase groceries.

Ham for Church Socials.

Many dealers sell considerable cooked ham to churches and their auxiliaries, as well as societies which frequently hold socials and luncheons. Business is not likely to come to anyone, however, unless a bid is made for it, so that efforts should be expended to secure such orders. The daily papers should be watched for announcements and then the proper parties seen at once.

These orders are usually large and mean considerable. They should be gone after systematically.

Grocers: The use of Alum in Baking Powder is condemned in England and several other countries. The trade as well as the consumer in Canada prefer the "No Alum" kind. As a protection against alum baking powder, see that all ingredients are plainly printed on the label. The mere use of the words, "No Alum," or something to that effect, is not sufficient. Some of the cheaper and poorer kinds contain large quantities of alum and are deliberately mis-branded. Do not be imposed upon.

Why are we Successful?

We have always had a strong faith in the ability of the retail grocer as a salesman, and while we have put into CLUB JELLY POWDER superior quality, that gives entire satisfaction to the consuming public, we have allowed for a profit to the dealer that makes it well worth his while to give us the benefit of his salesmanship. The combination has proven successful, and we regard the grocers of Canada as real partners in the work of giving the general public the best that money can buy—
